Accredited with saving Portugal from economic and social anarchy when he first came to power, António de Oliveira Salazar has won his first election, albeit posthumously and on the state television network whose creation he oversaw and regularly censored. Response to Salazar's unexpected victory in RTP's phone-in to elect "The Greatest Portuguese" has been muted, despite him winning the ballot by a margin never seen in any major political poll held in the country's 33-year old democracy. While some observers have said not too much should be read into this poll, other analysts believe it is a sign of changing times and burgeoning dissatisfaction.

Forget Dom Afonso Henriques, Marquês de Pombal, Luis de Camões or Infante Dom Henrique, António de Oliveira Salazar is the greatest man Portugal has produced in its long and illustrious history one of the biggest non-political polls ever staged in the country has shown.

Almost 220,000 citizens paid premium phone-in rates (129,000 euros) to cast their vote, with 'Benevolent Dictator' Salazar obtaining more than twice the votes of second-placed Álvaro Cunhal, who obtained 19 percent of the vote, 22 percent behind the winner.

The election of Communist Party-founder Cunhal also comes as a surprise, given his Stalinist viewpoints, which he maintained to his deathbed, 15 years after the Berlin Wall had been reduced to rubble.

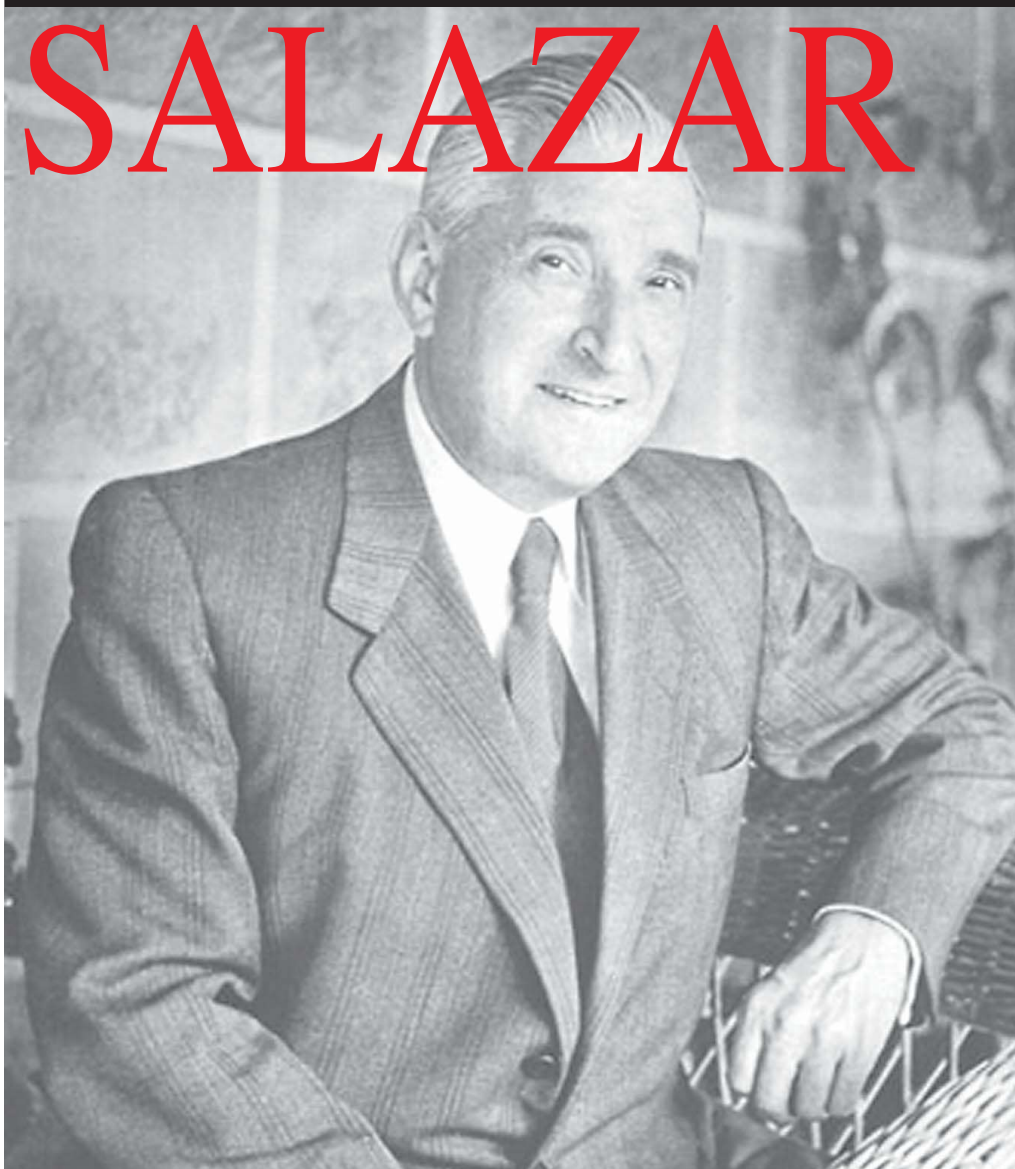

In third, was Aristides de Sousa Mendes, whose podium finish is as much a revelation as that of Salazar and Cunhal, as he never achieved cult status despite being widely considered as Portugal's greatest diplomat and recognised as the saviour of scores of Jews from Nazi persecution during the Second World War.

The top five is completed by D. Afonso Henriques and Luis Oporto Mayor Rui Rio has this week appealed for the government's intervention concerning the re-homing of 46 people from the Bacelo neighbourhood, which Mr Rio ordered to be demolished this week.

Mayor Rui Rio reportedly called upon the State Secretary for Social Security, Rui Marques, and requested that he instruct the local social services to "assume their responsibilities".

Mayor Rio issued two official statements guaranteeing that the neighbourhood's ex-inhabitants would be re-homed within a maximum period of two months.

In the meantime, he asked that they be sheltered in temporary accommodation, under the cover of a Social Emergency programme.

Portugal backs EU version of US green card scheme

Portugal last week welcomed plans by the European Commission to introduce its own version of the United States 'Green Card' scheme which will make it easier for immigrants to settle and work within the European Union.

Earlier in the month Prime Minister José Sócrates had called for an increase in the number of immigrant workers entering the EU to help ward off problems from an ageing population in the 27-nation bloc.

Inspired by the famous American Green Card scheme, the Commission is putting forward proposals to introduce its own 'blue card' system to attract more qualified immigrants.

EU Justice spokesman Friso Ascam Abbing told the AFP news agency that he was aware that EU member states hold differing views over legal immigration but added that "everyone understands immigration will be part of the solution to the ageing population problem. We had better manage immigration properly as it is going to happen anyway".

The 'blue card', taking its name from the EU flag – blue with golden stars – "would allow holders to move around the European Union," EU Immigration Commissioner Franco Frattini said Monday.

"Today, if a multinational company wants to move an engineer who is from a non-EU country and working in Rome to Brussels, they have to go through visa procedures, get a residency permit and a work permit", explained Frattini, who plans to present a formal proposal on the issue in September.

The Commission hopes the scheme will help EU member states as they seek to remain economically competitive as well as tackle the problems they face from ageing populations.

The 27-nation EU trails both the United States and Canada, which have a "very active recruitment policy," an EU official speaking on behalf of Frattini said. "There is that kind of potential in Africa which could be very useful to the EU," he added.

According to the Commission, the 'blue card' scheme would help the EU bring in the best workers from abroad, and target areas where they are particularly needed.

Latest statistics show that half of the immigrants in North America who are from the Middle East or North African regions are university graduates compared to under 13 per cent in the EU.

Frattini emphasised that "if the blue card is going to be attractive, there have to be inducements; no language requirements, the possibility of bringing the family over and a reasonably long permission to stay, more than just a year or two".

More Iraqis looking to settle in Portugal

The number of Iraqis seeking asylum in Portugal is on the rise, according to the United Nations refugee agency.

The UNHCR says that a total of 22,200 applications were made by Iraqis in 2006 looking to settle in European Union nations, up from 12,500 in 2005.

The majority of the two million Iraqis forced to flee their country remain in neighbouring nations such as Syria and Jordan - many of them awaiting the results of their asylum applications to the EU.

"The increase was particularly significant in the last quarter of 2006, when 8,100 Iraqis applied for asylum in the European Union," said UNHCR spokesman Ron Redmond. "This reflects the growing sectarian violence in Iraq," he added.

The vast majority of uprooted Iraqis remain living in difficult conditions in neighbouring countries in the region. Syria is home to one million while 750,000 are living in Jordan and up to 130,000 in Egypt.

For those attempting to leave the Middle East, the most popular destination is Sweden, followed by the Netherlands, Germany, Portugal, Spain and Greece.

Iraqis were the single largest group of asylum seekers looking to settle in the EU in 2006, followed by people from China, 18,300, Russia, 15,700, Serbia and Montenegro, 15,700, and Turkey 8,700.

However, in Europe as a whole, the number of Iraqi asylum seekers in 2006 was less than expected by the EU. The reason, according to the UNHCR, was due to more restrictive asylum policies being applied by the EU and also a slight improvement in conditions in their adopted home countries.

Portugal opens world's biggest solar plant

The world's largest solar photovoltaic power plant, located in southern Alentejo, become fully operational this week and at its peak, will generate enough energy to power eight thousand homes.

Portugal's Alentejo region this week welcomed a solar energy plant that produces double that of the previous largest plant which is based in Germany.

The plant was built at an estimated cost of 61 million euros and consists of 52,000 photovoltaic modules generating 11 megawatts.

The plant is run by a consortium that includes national company Catavento, General Electric (who financed the project) and Powerlight, international supplier of solar energy and who will be in charge of maintenance at the plant.

The environment will reap huge benefits from the plant, administrators say.

Under normal circumstances, in order to supply energy to eight thousand homes, more than 30,000 tons of greenhouse gas emissions in fossil fuels would be generated.

Tom Dinwoodie, CEO of PowerLight, in a recent press statement, called the project a "solar industry milestone."

The plant is in Serpa, which is one of Europe's sunniest areas.

It is built on a 60-hectare (150-acre) southern-facing hillside that will remain productive farmland.

The plant has meanwhile announced a tariff of 0.31 euros per kilowatt-hour that will be sold to the national electricity network.

It took six hundred workers to build the plant, but will only require five permanent workers now that it is fully operational.

However, the Serpa plant is set to be the biggest only until 2009, when neighbouring Moura intends to open one that will generate three times more energy.

"The construction of the station is clearly irreversible," Moura Mayor José Maria Posde-Mina said last year.

The plant will have 350,000 solar panels spread over 114 hectares and will be able to produce 62 megawatts.

The plant is expected to be completed in 2009 and will cost an estimated 250 million euros to complete.

The decision to go ahead with the power station was taken after a viability study showed that Moura has among the highest levels of solar radiation in the world.

It will be built by BP Solar, a unit of energy giant BP, and it is expected to create 240 permanent jobs in the southern province of Alentejo, one of Europe's poorest regions.

"This is a unique project and the world's most ambitious in terms of final capacity," said BP Solar commercial director for southern Europe, Mr Francisco Conesa.

Under the United Nations Kyoto Protocol, which Portugal has signed, Portugal must generate 39 per cent of its electricity needs through renewable energy sources by 2009.

Portugal's postal services among best in Europe

Portugal might not be firing on all cylinders when it comes to its economy, unemployment levels or secondary and tertiary education standards, but according to a survey published last week by the European Commission, it certainly has a lot to teach other European Union member states regarding how to run an efficient and profitable post office service.

The Commission's statistics office Eurostat, ranked Portugal in third place out of the 27 EU member states when it comes to delivering mail on time. Only Slovakia and the Netherlands proved to be more efficient in the delivery stakes with 99.0 per cent and 96.5 per cent respectively of their letter deliveries being pushed through customers' letterboxes on time. Portugal's post office service managed to deliver 95.6 per cent of letters within 24 hours.

At the other end of the scale, France struggled to deliver 75.7 per cent of its mail on time while the UK managed 91.0 per cent, Germany 87.9 per cent and Spain 84.3 per cent.

Portugal's performance becomes even more remarkable when taking into account the number of personnel employed by its post office industry. There are a total of 14,378 employees either working in or directly supporting the country's 3,037 post offices, which equates to 4.73 people per postal establishment – far fewer than in most other EU member states. Included in this number of personnel are part-time workers who are on the pay roll, as well as seasonal workers, apprentices and home workers.

On the other hand, the Netherlands has 42,150 personnel working in its 10,063 post offices – 19.95 people per post office – the UK has 195,952 employed within its 17,900 post offices – 10.9 people per post office – and Belgium has 32,311 working in 1,038 of the country's postal establishments – 31.2 people per post office.

The survey found that queuing at a post office in Portugal is far less time consuming than in most other EU member states. On average in Portugal, 3,449 people are served by one post office while in the Netherlands the figure is 7,698, Cyprus 14,048, Poland 4,574 and France 3,552.

Portuguese citizens are also beginning to post more letters than they did in the late 1990s. During 2005, the number of letters sent per capita of the population was 124 compared to 73 in 1999, but still somewhat adrift of the 326 posted by their Dutch counterparts and the 315 mailed by UK citizens.

EU praises Portugal's efforts to slash budget

European Union Economic and Monetary Affairs Commissioner Joaquim Almunia said this week that progress by Portugal's government in reducing its budget deficit last year was "very good", increasing the likelihood of Lisbon reining in its fiscal gap to below three percent of GDP by 2009, as demanded by Brussels.

Charity fraudsters use orphans for money

Police have confirmed they are looking for at least three suspected fraudsters who attempted to use the Faro children's home Refúgio Aboim Ascenção's name during a phoney door-to-door 'fundraising campaign'.

The first case was denounced by a seamstress in Quarteira, who raised the alarm after two men knocked on her door asking for charity for the institution.

She immediately contacted the Refúgio, who reported the incident to the police.

Later it emerged that a female accompanied by two men had also re-enacted the incident, this time in Lagos, during the afternoon.

Dr. Luis Villas Boas, director of Refúgio Aboim Ascenção in Faro, told The Portugal News he felt "indignant" by what took place, by people "attempting to use the refuge's name to make money".

"We have never done that, and we never will", he said of door-to-door campaigns.

Founded in 1921, Refúgio Aboim Ascenção is presently home to nearly one hundred infants, placed in the institution's care following various situations of neglect and/or abuse.

Speaking after a working breakfast with Portuguese Finance Minister Fernando Teixeira dos Santos, the EU commissioner said the reduction in Lisbon's budget gap last year "shows that the government's efforts are having the desired results".

Portugal's National Statistics Institute said last week that the budget gap for 2006 had been fixed at 3.9 percent, compared to the 4.6 percent predicted by Lisbon for last year.

Portugal's budget deficit had rocketed to around six percent in 2005, prompting Brussels to impose strict targets to rein in the shortfall over three years to below the eurozone's three percent ceiling.

On Monday, Lisbon's finance minister informed his EU colleagues that the centre-left Socialist government of Prime Minister José Sócrates had narrowed its fiscal deficit mainly through reducing state spending, as well as boosting tax revenues and combating fraud.

Public expenditure in Portugal has largely been lowered by slashing welfare benefits and pensions in the state sector, measures that have brought protestors into the streets of Lisbon over the past six months in several mass demonstrations. TPN/Lusa

One third of working time goes to paying taxes

Figures released last week show that more than one third of the average Portuguese worker's working year goes in paying taxes. In other words, it is not until early April that workers start earning money for themselves rather than the government.

The survey by the European Commission's official statistics agency Eurostat indicates that in 2005, tax revenue garnered by the government was 36.3 per cent of the nation's gross domestic product (GDP).

GDP represents the total annual value of all goods and services produced by the country's workforce. The figures revealed that agriculture produces 5.9 per cent of Portugal's annual GDP, industry 30.9 per cent and services 63.2 per cent.

While the Portuguese workers' tax burden increased from 35.4 per cent of GDP in 2004 to 36.3 per cent in 2005, the load was somewhat less compared with some other European Union member states.

French workers saw their tax rates rise to 45.8 per cent of GDP in 2005 from 45.0 per cent in the previous year. UK workers experienced a 1.2 per cent increase from 37.4 per cent to 38.6 per cent for the same period while the Netherlands fared better with a rise from 38.7 per cent to 39.2 per cent.

Eurostat measured the three main categories of compulsory tax levies – indirect taxes such as VAT, direct taxes on income and wealth, and social contributions for paying into social security funds or other social insurance schemes.

Because of differing national tax structures, these three components vary considerably in importance among countries in terms of what they actually collect in tax revenues.

One notable feature is that in new EU member states, including recent arrivals Bulgaria and Romania, there is less reliance on direct taxes as a form of government revenue than in the EU as a whole.

As a generalisation, the amount of taxes collected in Scandinavian countries tends to be higher than the EU-25's average of 40.9 per cent of GDP, and the amounts collected in the new member states tend to be lower.

Among the 25-member states, the highest ratio of tax revenue to GDP in 2005 was above 50 per cent in Sweden and Denmark. By contrast, the figures for the three Baltic States and for Slovakia were around 30 per cent.

Portugal's failure to attract foreign investment, which in turn could lower workers' tax burdens, is primarily due to the country's education system, according to the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

A recent report backed by the OECD said: "A poor educational system has been an obstacle to greater productivity and growth. Portugal has been increasingly overshadowed by lower-cost products in Central Europe and Asia", which are attracting an increasing amount of foreign investment.

Portugal presents its EU presidency priorities

The Portuguese government has presented its priorities for the European Union's energy sector during Lisbon's presidency of the EU later this year, including the creation of internal gas and electricity markets.

Portuguese Economy Minister Manuel Pinho, speaking after a meeting with European Energy Commissioner Andris Piebalgs, said another key goal of Portugal's EU stewardship in the energy area will be to define a regulatory framework for the use of Renewable Energy Sources (RES).

The third, and final, objective for the Portuguese EU presidency, running from July 1 to December 31, will be to develop a European Strategic Technical Energy Plan (SET-plan), Pinho said after his talks in Lisbon with the EU's energy chief.

The Lisbon government's directives for establishing the internal energy market will be presented to the European Parliament in July, said Pinho, noting the fact that the other two portfolios "are more delayed" will not have any negative impact on Portugal's EU stewardship.

Speaking in turn, the EU's energy commissioner said plans to create the directive framework and energy technology plan are forecast to be presented to the EP in October.

The Latvian commissioner also described the ambitions of Lisbon's forthcoming EU presidency in the energy field as very "ambitious", noting the "very valued support of Portugal" in this sector.

Brussels is working in "close conjunction with Lisbon to prepare" Portugal's six-month stint in the driving seat of the EU, he added. TPN/Lusa

Gov't red tape holding back jobs market

According to a report published Monday, excessive red tape and burgeoning bureaucracy is preventing Portugal's jobs market from developing in line with other Western European Union member states.

The Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) said in its Job Strategy report that Portugal urgently needs to get more people into paid employment if it wants to boost living standards and keep its welfare system afloat.

It points out that this objective can only be achieved by removing unnecessary bureaucracy and moving away from "policies that discourage people from working and companies from hiring and doing more to raise workers' skills".

Portuguese seeking work, often find their chances of getting a job are hampered by "poorly designed regulations, lack of job-search support or their own lack of job skills," the report says.

The upshot of these problems is that Portugal's economic growth is being held back and the brake is being applied to any increase in the country's prosperity, according to the OECD's General Secretary Angel Gurría.

"Systems that exclude people from employment are unfair and need to be changed. The key is to ensure that all economic policies are in line with and supportive of measures to boost employment and incomes," Gurría told journalists at a Brussels press conference.

"We believe that countries that take action along the lines we are recommending will be rewarded by a stronger labour market and, most importantly, improved living standards," she added.

The report makes it clear that there "is no magic bullet or single set of economic policies that can solve a given country's employment problems".

However, it lays down basic criteria that it considers essential if countries such as Portugal are to reduce current high rates of unemployment and reap the benefits of "globalisation".

Among these criteria are recommendations to "adapt regulations and tax policies so as to encourage companies to take on staff rather than shun new hires". It is also recommended that legislation protecting job security does not undermine the "dynamism of the labour market or lead to discrimination in hiring and firing".

Portugal is urged to provide people of working age with the education and training opportunities required to "get jobs and raise their income".

The setting of "macroeconomic policies which aim to achieve price stability and sustainable public finances," is also recommended.

Barroso dances the night away

Celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Treaty of Rome - the forerunner to the current 27 nation European Union - European Commission chief Durão Barroso joined with revellers in Berlin last Sunday before attending a performance of Beethoven's 5th Symphony with EU leaders followed by a sumptuous banquet in the German parliament building.

EU Snippets

Only 25 percent think the EU has made life better

Only a quarter of people in the five biggest EU countries think that their lives have got better since their country joined the EU, according to a London Financial Times newspaper survey. Twenty five per cent of citizens questioned in Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Spain thought that membership of the EU had improved their lives, while some 44 per cent said their lives had got worse. However, that did not mean they wanted to leave the community. Just under 23 per cent said their country would be better off by withdrawing from the 27-nation bloc, compared to 40 per cent who thought it would be worse off. The poll also found that 35 per cent of respondents thought that the proposed EU constitution would have a positive impact on their country, against 27 per cent who thought the opposite. The Financial Times poll questioned 6,772 adults in the five EU countries between February 28th, and March 12th.

Cast off EU cars flooding Bulgaria's roads

Bulgaria's entry into the EU led to the lifting of all previous import taxes and opened the floodgates to a polluting stream of second-hand cars that is stalling traffic on Sofia's pothole-filled roads. In the first two months of joining the EU, the Interior Ministry recorded a record 46 per cent rise in car registrations as an additional 34,677 second-hand vehicles and 8,723 new ones joined the traffic jams on Bulgaria's already busy roads. Traffic in the EU's poorest newcomer member state is dominated by cars that Germans and Italians used to drive 10 years ago. The surprisingly low mileages rarely correspond to the age of second-hand cars but dealers have a ready-made answer: "The car belonged to an old lady".

Cyprus gives Euro the go-ahead

The Cyprus parliament last week voted in favour of adopting the euro on January 1st, 2008, despite opposition from a senior partner in the island's ruling coalition. The 56-seat house in Cyprus, which joined the EU in May 2004, passed the legislation by 36 votes to 15 against. MP Stavros Evagorou urged a delay to give a "transitional economy" more time to harmonise with Europe and allow extra funding for social programmes. Cyprus had to approve EU-mandated legislation in order to adopt the euro in accordance with a European Central Bank deadline. The legislation covers the conversion process - a year-long dual pricing system after the pound is locked against the euro, dual circulation of both currencies for one month, and 100,000-euro fines for profiteers under a "naming and shaming" policy.

EU warns Poland over homosexual ban

A proposed bill to ban the discussion of homosexuality in Polish schools would violate free speech, the EU warned Poland's government last week. Education Minister Roman Giertych's views on homosexuality and lesbianism are seen by many as being homophobic. In 2006, the Council of Europe threatened action against Giertych after a Polish education official was sacked for compiling a manual on human rights education that contained a favourable disposition towards homosexuals. Mr. Giertych heads the small right-wing ultra Catholic League of Catholic Families Party. The Human Rights Watch group said the ban "would create a climate of intolerance in schools". In a letter to Poland's Prime Minister Jaroslaw Kaczynski, the group claimed the proposed ban would also unfairly punish anyone who promoted homosexuality or "any other deviance of a sexual nature in educational establishments". It stressed that the ban "would deprive students of potentially life-saving information on AIDS/HIV".

German arrested for 19 murders in EU countries

A detained German truck driver is suspected of being behind at least 19 murders over more than 30 years in Germany, France and Spain. The 48-year-old man, who was arrested in November, "is suspected of having committed at least 19 murders between 1974, when the suspect was 15-years-old, and 2006," a German police agency announced Monday. The man was arrested by German authorities in Cologne, who identified him only as Volker E., after he was captured on a CCTV camera operated by a private Spanish company while disposing of one of his victims near Barcelona. When confronted with the evidence, the suspect allegedly admitted to five murders in Spain and France as well as his first in Germany, where the victim was 14-years-old. When police picked the suspect up, they found clothing, hair and photos of murdered prostitutes in his possession.

In between swivelling his hips to rock bands at an open-air concert close to the Brandenburg Gate and licking his lips after the six-course two-hour repast, Barroso told journalists that the European Union represents the future of Europe.

"European politicians have to convince citizens that the European Union is the best answer to 21st Century challenges such as globalisation and sustainable growth," he said.

Barroso was quick to applaud the German government on its 'Berlin Declaration' celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Treaty of Rome saying it sets the goal of putting the 27-nation bloc on a new foundation by 2009.

He pointed out that the declaration did not contain any specific reference to the controversial EU draft constitution although it did speak of "a renewing in time for the 2009 European Parliamentary elections the basis on which the European Union is built".

Italian Prime Minister Romano Prodi went further than Barroso in pushing the proposed constitution into the limelight by saying that without a constitution "Europe will die" - a view shared by several member states, including Portugal.

The German Chancellor Angela Merkel, whose country holds the EU six-month rotating presidency, told party revellers outside the German Parliament that the enlarged 27-member EU needs a new constitution to streamline decision-making.

But most political observers were of the opinion that much of Barroso and Merkel's chimes on Europe and the proposed constitution were lost on the 60,000 plus German citizens who were treated to an all-night clubbing extravaganza, in which ravers hopped between 35 Berlin night-clubs for an EU-subsidised 12 euros while gulping down barrels of free bratwurst and beer.

The free open-air concert near to the Brandenburg Gate featured bands from all over Europe. They included veteran English rocker Joe Cocker, Scottish folk band The Universal Suspects, and Outlandish, a Danish-Moroccan trio.

Portugal among first to provide aid after fatal Mozambique blast

International aid began arriving in the Mozambican capital at the weekend, following fires and explosions at a suburban arms depot that left at least one hundred dead and more than 450 injured.

Portugal delivered a five-ton plane-load of emergency medical supplies Sunday and Brazil, another of Mozambique's partners in the Community of Portuguese Language Countries (CPLP), promised help.

While there has been no official explanation for the arms depot tragedy that took place last Thursday on the outskirts of Maputo, the country's opposition leader, Afonso Dhlakama, dismissed early Defence Ministry indications that excessive heat was to blame as "disinformation" and a "lack of courage".

In comments Friday, Dhlakama set aside demands from some quarters for the resignation of Defence Minister Gen. Tobias Dai, saying what was needed was thorough reform of defence policy and greater discipline in military installations.

PM calls for EU to remain tolerant, cohesive and open

Europe's future "depends on its being faithful to its genetic code, the secret of its success: tolerance, cohesion and openness", Portuguese Prime Minister José Sócrates said in an article published in a German newspaper.

"We can't permit the loss of solidarity, cohesion, openness and the community method of decision making", Sócrates wrote in a Frankfurter Allgemeine supplement marking the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Rome, the EU's founding charter.

The Portuguese leader said that Lisbon, which joined the EU in 1986, had "always been at the forefront of European integration, whenever it meant the deepening of the European project, making efforts to reinforce its single political component".

Portugal's turn at the EU helm during the latter half of this year would provide a "unique opportunity" for Lisbon to press forward with these commitments, he added. TPN/Lusa

‘SuperJumbo’ sweeps Lisbon skies

Earlier this week the much-talked-about Airbus A-380, the largest airliner in the world, swept over Lisbon airport's runway as part of its training and experimentation phase.

After approaching the airport at low-altitude the double-decker aircraft glided along the runway without actually touching down. Measuring 24 metres in height, with a wingspan of 80 metres, the ‘SuperJumbo’ has a capacity for 800 passengers and can travel at up to 1,000 kilometres per hour.

Since March 19th the plane has been undergoing test flights, already having flown without passengers to cities around the world, including New York, Chicago, Washington, Hong Kong, Frankfurt and Munich.

Those watching the skies in Lisbon on Monday afternoon would have been astounded by the ‘Giant of the Skies’, which according to some eyewitnesses caused a certain amount of alarm given the deafening noise it generated.

En-route from Bordeaux, according to ANA Airport and Air Navigation spokesperson Rui Oliveira, everything went as planned with the jumbo's rehearsal landing.

A commercial test flight has already taken place with 500 guest passengers aboard.

A new psychotherapy approach to be presented in Lisbon

A clinical psychologist who practices in Greenville, South Carolina is scheduled to present a 4 hour pre-conference workshop on a Clinical Biopsychological Approach in the treatment of psychological problems at the Society for the Exploration of Psychotherapy Integration (SEPI) meeting in Lisbon, on July 5th. There will be more detailed continuing education workshops on this approach for mental health professionals in Philadelphia and Baltimore on May 18th and May 25th.

The clinical biopsychological approach is based on the brain model published in the recent issue of The Journal of Mind and Behavior. The cortical model was developed over 20 years ago, but enough support from brain imaging studies has only now made the theory publishable in a peer-reviewed journal. Clinical psychologist, Robert A. Moss, Ph.D., ABPP, has an upcoming paper on how the model relates to the treatment of negative emotional memories that will be published in an upcoming issue of the Journal of Psychotherapy Integration, SEPI's APA journal.

The upcoming workshop in Lisbon will be the first time this has been presented to an international audience of psychologists. Dr. Moss has been working with a clinical biopsychological approach in the treatment of psychological problems, including depression and anxiety, in his private practice for years, though these are the first articles to appear in peer reviewed journals.

The approach differs from the three main theoretical approaches (i.e., psychodynamic, humanistic/experiential, and cognitive-behavioral) to individual psychotherapy, in that it is the only one based on a brain model. Dr. Moss is board certified in both clinical psychology and neuropsychology. Based on this brain model, Dr. Moss has written a professional manual on conducting treatment, a self-help book, and two Christian books.

Further delays for tunnel opening

The Marquês tunnel, which has already suffered extensive set backs and was last predicted to be opening at the beginning of April, will now be open at the end of April "at the best", sources have said.

According to the source, the current delay, which further adds to a 'set-back' of over two and a half years, is due to the project's imminent handover to the city hall this Saturday.

After being delivered to municipal authorities, Lisbon City Hall will carry out its own tests and examinations to ensure everything is as ordered.

This alone will set back the original opening, intended for the beginning of April, by nearly one month.

Should any alterations or adjustments be required, then the opening date could be set back again, indefinitely.

Tests are already being carried out on the infrastructure, such as the ventilation and smoke and fume extraction systems.

According to Pedro Feist, councillor in charge of municipal projects, these tests are the most crucial for the tunnel's opening and could be the ones that cause further delays.

Works on the tunnel commenced in August 2003 with their completion initially announced for December 2004. However, the tunnel was put on hold after legal action was implemented regarding environmental issues.

Lisbon City Mayor Carmona Rodrigues has said that the tunnel, when open, will be "permanently monitored" by traffic lights and a radar system identical to others already functioning around the city, placed on the Amoreiras/Marquês Pombal roundabout. Traffic circulating through the structure will be limited to a maximum speed of 50 kilometres/hour.

Heavenly Music

The Exeter University Chamber Orchestra recently visited Lisbon and performed a number of concerts, including one at St. Andrew's Church on Sunday, March 25. The repertoire included the Simple Sympny by Britten, Variations on a theme of Tchaikovsky, a Flute Concerto in D Minor and a Concerto for Saxophone and String Orchestra.

The excellent and well attended performance at St. Andrew's Church was thoroughly enjoyed by one and all and was followed by refreshments and conviviality. The photograph shows the members of the Chamber Orchestra with Rev. Bill Ross.

Democrats Abroad Meet in Germany

Democrats from around the world met in Heidelberg, Germany last weekend to lay the groundwork for winning the Presidency and increasing their majorities in the House and Senate in the 2008 election.

"Because we live outside the United States, members of Democrats Abroad see the damaging effect of the Bush Administration's policies on the entire world every single day," said newly elected International Chair Christine Schon Marques.

Democrats Abroad is the official arm of the Democratic Party for Americans living outside the United States in over 70 countries. Founded in 1964, it holds voting seats on the Democratic National Committee and sends a voting delegation to the party's national convention that selects the Democratic nominee for President.

Meia Praia to be spruced up

Half a dozen luxury hotels and apartments with a total capacity for 13,500 people, a congress centre and the extension of the Palmares golf course from 18 to 27 holes are but a few of the projects that look set to elevate Meia Praia's status. This, however, has caused a stir with the village's indigenous population, Portuguese settlers known as 'Indians'.

Despite still being in the first phases of public debate, the project, which is thought to span the next decade, has already obtained a favourable nod from the Regional Coordination and Development Committee.

Six four-and-five-star hotels are to comprise the 10-year plan.

Lagos Mayor, Júlio Barroso said, "The Meia Praia Urbanization Plan will be strongly inclined towards tourism and hospitality".

Despite the benefits, Mayor Barroso realises that by implementing the project it will be "touching something that is very dear to all Lagos citizens", adding that although Meia Praia is part of Portugal's wealth, it is firstly "Lagos's wealth".

Dozens of fishermen and their families made Meia Praia their home after settling in the small village in the 1950's due to the wealth of fish found along the respective coastline.

Baptised 'Indians' by the locals, these families were later immortalised in Portuguese film and song. Lagos city hall is gradually trying to re-incorporate this unique group of inhabitants back into the city through a re-homing programme, affirming, "We don't want ghettos".

However, the 'Indians' are standing firm on the land they adopted, going as far as to suggest legal action to rightfully claim their land, should it be necessary.

"The 'Indian' families will remain united in their fight to stay in Meia Praia", said José Bartolomeu, head of the Meia Praia Village Residents Committee, "Even if we have to leave, we will choose where we move to".

"We don't want them to remove the Portuguese from here to replace them with foreigners", he concluded.

The site which will accommodate the new development plans for Meia Praia

Faro and Loulé to build Algarve's largest auditorium

Faro and Loulé city halls have joined forces to pen a project that will see the construction of the Algarve's largest auditorium as well as a multi-use pavilion and a four-star hotel.

However, only 15 percent of the overall budget has been obtained so far.

With an estimated cost of 20 million euros, only three million euros are guaranteed for the future 1,800-seater auditorium's construction, administrators said this week.

During a press conference, Faro Mayor José Apolinário emphasised the difficulties that the municipalities of Loulé and Faro are experiencing at present, though defended the project's completion as a bonus for the region.

To be located next to the Algarve Stadium, Architect Regino Cruz, who designed Lisbon's Atlântico Pavilion and Estoril's congress centre, has been given the task of creating the new infrastructure.

Covering 21,400 square metres, the auditorium will have rising platforms, will be dividable, and will be surrounded by a 200-room four-star hotel, shops, offices and parking for 5,000 vehicles. Along with the Algarve Stadium, the area will be designated 'Parque das Cidades'.

According to the architect, the design will aim to create a building "that will be missed by all those who visit it".

Of the 20 million euros estimate, 2.5 million is being supplied by investors Vilamoura XXI, with another 500,000 euros from past communitarian aids.

It is hoped that the EU will supply the remaining 17 million euros, though the Mayors are encouraging private investors to contribute too.

Contrary to a general belief that the new project will become yet another 'White Elephant', as did the Algarve Stadium, Mayor Apolinário and Loulé Mayor Seruca Emídio have assured that the new project will guarantee the sustainability of the 'Parque das Cidades' as a whole.

Head for the Swiss alps with Faro's new route

As of May, low-cost airline Helvetic Airways will be introducing a new route, direct from Faro, once a week to Zurich, Switzerland.

Directly connecting Faro to one of Switzerland's main airports, this new route, which will commence on May 10th, will offer the opportunity for those living in Switzerland or the Algarve to commute at a fraction of standard costs.

For airline Helvetic, the Algarve is a brand new market and will be the first time it is introduced to the region. For Francisco Pita, head of Faro airport's Marketing department, the Faro-Zurich route represents an "important step for the region's development and accessibility, favouring the growth and variety of new tourism markets".

According to Francisco Pita, the Faro-Zurich route is one of many exciting new introductions for Faro airport. Others will be revealed with the launch of Faro airport's 'Summer Schedule', later this season.

Authorities target 'parallel' tourist accommodation

Thirty-nine cases have been opened by the Food and Economic Safety Authority ASAE in the Algarve against venues offering unlicensed tourist accommodation.

The venues targeted by the ASAE include holiday resorts and private properties offering rooms or beds as tourist accommodation but that are not officially licensed to do so.

"Operation Parallel Beds" took place across the Algarve, towards the end of last week, and had nine ASAE teams inspect 44 tourist venues, with only five of these escaping 'punishment'.

Eighty-nine percent of the cases were related to the lack of respective licensing, whilst the remaining cases were subject to penalisation for not posting prices or establishment classification placards.

According to ASAE spokesperson Manuel Lage, the fines can vary between 500 and 2,500 euros for private establishments offering non-licensed accommodation, and can soar up to 33,000 euros for established businesses or collective companies in the same situation.

While there are no official figures available, Eldérico Viegas, of the Algarve Association for Hotels and Tourist Establishments AHETA, estimates that half of the Algarve's visitors do not stay in licensed accommodation.

"Of the six million tourists that visited the Algarve in 2006, half stayed in their holiday homes, with family or friends, or used 'parallel' accommodation", said Viegas.

The Algarve says goodbye to Pam Eggleton

Many people will be sad to hear that Pam Eggleton passed away on March 15th at Palhagreira nursing home having suffered a stroke weeks previously.

Her funeral will be on Monday, 2nd of April, at 10.30 and will be held at St. Luke's church, Palhagreira, Sta. Barbara de Nexe.

Pam was the founder in 1981 of Riding for the Disabled in the Algarve, bringing to it her extensive knowledge as a horsewoman and as a physiotherapist.

As they say, from little acorns mighty oaks grow. Pam was that little acorn which promoted the development of therapeutic riding and hippotherapy throughout Portugal through the professional training courses organised in the Algarve for therapists and riding instructors.

Many groups now exist in Portugal to benefit disabled people who may benefit from this valuable therapy.

No flowers please but the family have said that Pam would prefer a donation to RDA Algarve to help continue the good work. (contact Rosemary Owen, President, Tel : 964 027 677).

The Algarve Way Works

The Algarve Way, a long-distance footpath across the Algarve, has been walked independently for the first time. Developed and recorded by ex-pats Terry Ames and David Littlewood from Salir, the 260km walk from Alcoutim to Cape St. Vincent was just waiting for the first people to use it without personal guidance.

Daniel and Caroline Pearl, from Hampshire, UK, became the first successful Algarve Way walkers using the new route when they reached the Cape last Wednesday evening.

They used the materials on the website www.algarveway.com, together with advice from Terry and David, to help them navigate the route.

Despite losing their way once or twice, and ending their day in the dark more than once, they made the crossing in eleven days.

"These two young people have recorded a considerable achievement. We are proud of them, and grateful for all the feedback they have been giving us, which will help us to improve the walk for the future", said David.

Interest in this 'unofficial' long-distance pathway is growing. In April and May, members of the St Patrick's Society will be walking the whole route in weekly stages, and in October, it is hoped that the route will be run by two experienced marathon competitors over a period of about six days.

This is in addition to the charity ride in May being organised by Rod Frew and Jinny Harman, which uses a broadly similar route.

Anyone wishing to have information about the walk should see the website, or contact David on davidanddinah75@btopenworld.com

Barroso takes a swipe at political correctness

European Commission chief Durão Barroso last week gave vent to his feelings regarding political correctness saying there was no room for such "brainwashing" methods in the European Union.

In an interview with The Daily Telegraph, Mr. Barroso told the British daily that Europe's citizens must be on their guard against political correctness and moralising politicians.

He explained that he was concerned that freedom could be the loser in European culture wars over climate change, cheap air travel, Islam and free speech.

"We should be aware of people who, sometimes for good reasons, try to establish what I call private moral codes, for this or that, be it climate change, religious behaviour or any kind of social behaviour," he said.

Mr. Barroso, a former Maoist student who fought against the Portuguese dictatorship in the early 1970s, said he still regards himself as a freedom fighter in defence of a private individual's opinion, even when the calls for bans or restrictions are for a worthy cause, such as global warming or respect for Muslim communities.

"I was 18 years old when a democratic revolution came to my country. Before we could not read the books or listen to the music we wanted. I am radical on these matters. If there is an excess of freedom, it is better to have excess than less," he said, referring to a Europe's deep divisions over controversies surrounding Islam.

"We have to show respect for all communities but the fundamental right of freedom of expression is for me more important than other collective rights," he added.

The former Portuguese prime minister pointed out that his own personal experience of authoritarianism has made him wary of both those who are seeking to ban the wearing of the Islamic veil and Muslims who require girls to cover up.

"The veil should not be banned just as girls should not be forced to wear it. People should be able to choose what clothes they wear – as long as they don't go naked of course," he told his interviewer.

Mr. Barroso insisted that the rights of the individual, within the law, over moral strictures from either secular or religious communities, are sacred. "In the Europe, I want, the right to choose has primacy," he concluded.

Portugal finally becomes 'self-sufficient' in blood

Portugal has become self-sufficient in terms of blood donations, having an equally-proportioned ratio of donors to receivers.

Gabriel Olim, president of the Portuguese Blood Institute (IPS), revealed this week that almost 1,000 donations take place every day, meaning that the country no longer sees patients die or postpone operations through lack of blood resources.

However, he also stressed that the supplies must be maintained, as the need for blood transfusions continues to rise.

In order to achieve this status, the IPS has established a minimum reserve for a normal week's consumption, acknowledging "good work", the result of awareness-raising campaigns, and a "highly motivated population", including more young people and women, as the responsible factors for the current state of self-sufficiency.

According to the IPS president, the Portuguese blood supply is one of the safest in the world and of "unsurpassable" quality.

PROPERTY OF THE WEEK

A Quinta-ssential Portuguese lifestyle

Once again, leading Algarve Company Land & Houses – Yellow Homes is showcasing another fine example of quality real estate. This week's 'Property of the Week' is an exemplary model of a traditional Portuguese quinta, renovated to very high standards and made unique with a rustic-chic feel and a hint of Arabia...

The property is located just outside the beautiful village of Santa Catarina, where sunny, peaceful countryside prevails and the hustle and bustle of daily life fades into a distant concern.

Polished brick floors and high wooden ceilings make this property unique.

Measuring just under a hectare, the area around the expansive cottage is landscaped into pretty gardens, with natural stone and brick patios and saltwater swimming pool, before gradually edging off into natural rural land, which retains indigenous flora like carob and olive trees.

The main door opens straight into an open-plan traditional-style kitchen and large living/dining area.

Immediately striking are the high wooden A-frame ceilings, polished brick floors and the feeling of space. Light floods in through the many windows and patio doors that front the room. To the right is a staircase that climbs to a large, open mezzanine. Half way up the mezzanine staircase, on a mid-level, is the first of four bedrooms; a very large room with a private terrace overlooking the garden and pool, a big en-suite bathroom, and in-built wardrobe space.

The mezzanine itself is a spacious area that is ideal as an extra living room, a home office, or a games room.

A wood-burning stove takes pride of place in the downstairs living/dining room, which is separated from the kitchen by a large, Arabian-inspired arch, a design feature found throughout the interior of the property, along with other features like rustic reclaimed doors.

The living room patio doors open onto a spacious covered terrace, complete with pergola roofing, a Moroccan-influenced water feature and an in-built barbeque.

Left from the living room is a long corridor that opens into a bright storage area, ideal as an artist's studio or to use a piano. From here doors open into the remaining three bedrooms. Two bedrooms share a separate bathroom, whilst the third bedroom has its own en-suite bathroom and a dressing area.

The property benefits from a water softener, own borehole and cistern, plenty of room for parking, carport, and good road access to all of nearby Santa Catarina's amenities. It is priced at €799,000.

Arabian-inspired arches and rustic reclaimed timbers can be found throughout.

The expansive cottage is landscaped into pretty gardens, with natural stone and brick patios and a saltwater swimming pool.

Portugal ready to launch military action in Congo to protect citizens

Portugal has a "joint military force" prepared to evacuate its nationals from violence-wracked Democratic Republic of Congo if necessary, the Foreign Ministry said.

The ministry said the government was following developments in Kinshasa, where fighting broke out Thursday between loyalist and dissident forces, with "the greatest attention" and that a military force was "ready to carry out an evacuation".

It said Lisbon's embassy in the Congolese capital was in "permanent contact" with the resident 1,000-strong Portuguese community and that the government had activated "mechanisms for consultation and information" with European Union partners and with "several" African countries in the region.

The Portuguese "joint military force" had "operational conditions to begin a (evacuation) mission at any moment", the Foreign Ministry said.

António Braga, the state secretary for expatriate communities, told Lusa in Madrid that all 960 Portuguese in the DR Congo, about 450 of them in Kinshasa, the capital, were "well".

"They are in permanent contact with the embassy and await the evolution of the situation", said Braga, who was in Madrid on a working visit.

If an evacuation becomes necessary, Braga said such an operation would be carried out in "co-ordination and partnership with European partners".

Kinshasa became the scene of heavy fighting Thursday between Congolese government troops and forces loyal to opposition leader Jean- Pierre Bemba, who lost the presidential runoff vote last year to President Joseph Kabila.

The Kinshasa government has ordered the arrest of Bemba, who took sanctuary in the South African embassy, for "high treason". TPN/Lusa

President Joseph Kabila (R) from the Democratic Republic of the Congo is met by Tanzanian officials upon arrival at Julius Nyerere International Airport in Dar es Salaam on Wednesday. ## FM holds talks with Arab League, Moscow

Portuguese Foreign Minister Luís Amado was in Saudi Arabia this week where he participated in an Arab League summit centred on efforts to re-launch the Middle East peace process and the crises in Iraq and Lebanon, the Foreign Ministry said.

The ministry said Luís Amado was invited to attend the 19th summit of the 22 Arab states in Riyadh in the framework of Portugal's upcoming role as president of the European Union.

Amado was also scheduled to hold bilateral talks with several Arab counterparts, the Necessidades Palace said.

On departing the Saudi capital, the Portuguese foreign minister flew to Moscow for talks with Russian diplomatic leaders on Thursday.

A diplomatic source in Moscow told Lusa that Amado's agenda in the Russian capital would focus on "two big blocks of issues": Lisbon's preparations for its EU presidency beginning July 1 and "the great international questions".

TPN/Lusa

Lisbon looks to end Dutch exploitation of workers

Portuguese State Secretary for Communities Antonio Braga was on a two-day visit to the Netherlands this week with the issue of exploitation of workers from Portugal at the top of his agenda in talks with expatriates and Dutch officials, the Lusa News Agency reported.

State Secretary Braga, who recently visited Spain to discuss alleged abuse of Portuguese workers' rights in the neighbouring Iberian state, is making his second trip to Holland to investigate exploitation of workers from Portugal.

The main complaints of Portuguese nationals working in the Netherlands have concerned low wages, poor working conditions and sub-standard accommodation provided by employers.

Top scientists meet in Madeira

Last Monday, top scientists from around the world met for a two-day conference in Funchal, Madeira, to review the latest developments in electronic communications technology – a field that is playing an increasingly important role in commerce and industry.

A spokesman for the organisers of the event said the Interoperability for Enterprise Software and Applications conference had brought together the world's leading researchers and practitioners in "e-Business and vision research".

He told journalists that the forum had enabled a "fruitful exchange of the participants' experiences".

"The annual conference is a unique forum for the exchange of visions, ideas, research results and industrial experiences, dealing with a wealth of interoperability research subjects for businesses, enterprise applications and software," the spokesman added.

Keynote speakers at the event included Dr. Cristina Martinez, head of IT Research for the European Commission, Dr. Howard Mason, Director of BAE's Electronic Business Standards department and Dr.

Reinhard Buscher, head of the European Union's Unit for Industrial Aspects of Electronic Commerce.

The conference heard how it is now possible to fly aircraft – regardless of size, weight or passenger capacity – to any destination in the world without the need of an on-board pilot or flight crew. All achieved by the latest electronic air surveillance satellite control system which enables ground control to take over the take-off and landing procedures of aircraft as well as changing flight paths and altitude levels.

Delegates were also treated to an "exhibits programme" where they were invited to try their hand at operating the latest techniques in electronic communications.

A high-quality pre-conference programme consisting of workshops, tutorials and a doctoral symposium helped delegates warm up for the two-day conference.

Salazar, from p.1.

Vaz de Camões, respectively. The programme 'Greatest Portuguese' is based on the BBC brainchild and has been staged in a number of countries across the world, with Portugal undoubtedly providing the biggest surprise to date.

France elected Charles de Gaulle, Americans voted for Ronald Reagan and Britain chose Winston Churchill.

Each of the ten finalists in Portugal were represented by prominent figures who would fight their contestant's cause in the run-in to the election that was held this past weekend.

University Professor Jaime Nogueira Pinto who took Salazar under his wing, played down any moves to scrutinise the election as being indicative of discontent brewing.

"This is essentially a competition. We cannot say this has been a political catastrophe", but he stressed the accepted to 'sponsor' Salazar as "there is a part of 20th century history that has been told incorrectly".

Diplomat and anti-CIA rendition flight campaigner Ana Gomes, who represented Vasco da Gama (who ended tenth in voting), said: "I think the results portray a terrible image of Portugal and Portuguese, which do not correspond with the reality of the country, though I am not challenging the results of voting".

The most critical voice was that of Odete Santos, who led Álvaro Cunhal to second place. She argued, "Sympathising with fascism is prohibited by the constitution", adding that the manner in which Salazar has been portrayed has resulted in the "dilution of fascism".

On a political front, the Left Bloc and Communist Party have lashed out at RTP, the divided ruling Socialists and the centre-right, saying the competition is merely a television show.

The station has also been criticised for the manner in which it presented the show, with constant references being made to the precedents set in Germany, Spain and Italy.

In Germany, Adolf Hitler was excluded, while Spain and Italy declined to air the show, believing it could cause "national embarrassment".

Shortly after Salazar was elected Portugal's greatest, residents from his hometown, Santa Comba Dão heard that the government had refused their request to turn the house in which Salazar was born into a museum, saying such a venture would not be viable.

In a related story, the far-right seems to be looking to cash in on the growing sympathy emerging for the former dictator and some of his policies.

A billboard, located in the heart of the capital (at the Marquês de Pombal traffic circle) has been erected by the National Renewal Party (PNR) calling for immigrants to be repatriated.

The billboard headlines, "Stop Immigration", and is followed by "Nationalism is the Solution".

An image of a plane taking off is captioned, "Have a pleasant journey" in reference to immigrants heading back home.

The "advertisement" concludes by demanding: "Portugal to the Portuguese".

National companies get major boost to invest in Lusophone states

The Portuguese government and four major national banks have joined ranks to back Portuguese businesses in emerging economies, especially in Lusophone African countries, an official said Friday.

A Finance Ministry official told Lusa the government and the four banks had set up a Financial Partnership for Development (SOFID), with initial capital of 15 million euros.

The state will be the major shareholder of SOFID, with a 59.9% share, in an initiative developed in the framework of the EU's Cotonou Convention with developing countries.

The official said that the SOFID project, which initially will target Portuguese companies doing business in Africa's five Portuguese-speaking countries, was sent Thursday to the National Bank for final authorization.

The partner banks - the Portuguese Bank of Investments (BPI), Espírito Santo (BES), Caixa Geral de Depósitos, and Millenium BCP - will each hold 10% of the SOFID's capital.

The remaining 0.1% will be held by the ELO Business Association, which represents Portugal in the Business Council of the eight-nation Community of Portuguese Language Countries (CPLP).

SOFID will grant credit, guarantees and risk capital, the official said. TPN/Lusa

TAP to offer daily Luanda flights

TAP/Air Portugal will offer daily flights between Lisbon and the Angolan capital, Luanda, beginning in July, the national flag-carrier announced.

TAP currently has five weekly Lisbon-Luanda flights.

The company said the increase was a response to growing demand on the Angolan route.

The sixth weekly flight will begin April 28 and the seventh on July 3, TAP said.

The route, it added, will be served by Airbus A340 jetliners with a capacity for 268 passengers. TPN/Lusa

IRS 2006: Procedures nº 4 - Filing Exemptions

by Dennis Swing Greene

Before 1989, a conscientious Foreign Resident, wanting to declare income from abroad, would have been turned away at the local Finanças office. The reason was quite simple: under the former tax code called "Complementary Tax", only individual income derived in Portugal was taxable; therefore, most income from abroad was exempt. Sadly, those days are long gone and all but a meager few are expected to declare their worldwide income as Fiscal Residents of Portugal.

Questions and Answers:
Who is exempted from submitting a Portuguese income tax return?

All those earning income in 2006 are required to submit a tax declaration with the following exceptions:

a) those who only have earnings subject to final withholding tax (except dividends) and accept the tax paid as final.
b) those receiving only pensions falling below the annual pension allowance - National Minimum Wage - €7,500 per individual in 2006.

The only income that I received in 2006 was from bank interest, taxed at source (20%). Do I have to declare this income?
If the interest and respective withholding were in Portugal, no declaration is required. Nevertheless, if your tax rate falls below 20%, you may achieve a small savings in reporting and submitting a return. In other words, you may be entitled to a refund!
If the interest that you received came from outside of Portugal and you are resident for tax

In this series of articles, we examine required procedures when declaring Individual Income Tax "IRS" in Portugal:

- 1) Fiscal Residency
- 2) Submitting your "IRS" Declaration
- 3) Non-Residents
- 4) Exemptions from Filing
- 5) Marital Status

purposes, this income should be reported regardless of the withholding.

Beware: The EU Savings Directive came into force in July 2005 and has substantially changed reporting procedures. Make sure you declare correctly under the new law!

My Old Age Pension falls below the Portuguese minimum wage. But I also had a small amount of income from investments abroad. Do I still have to submit a tax return?

Yes. The true purpose of this reporting waiver is to exempt the large number of small Portuguese pensioners who would only clog up the system without bringing in any appreciable income to the State's coffers. All others must file. In addition to the standard Modelo 3, any investment income from abroad must be reported on Annex J (Income from Abroad).

Even though I'm resident here, my pension is paid into the bank back home. Do I still have to declare?

Yes. Where your income is paid is irrelevant: neither where you receive it, nor if you spend it, nor the currency in which it is paid. What matters is that it is available to you. That's what makes it taxable.

My bank interest is paid in GB Sterling. How do I report income in another currency?

All income and expenses must be reported in Euros, regardless of the original currency of the transaction.

As a non-resident, I receive rental income in Portugal. Do I declare here or in my home country?

Both. Your first obligation is to Portugal since the property, and therefore the activity, is located here. In accordance with the Double Taxation Treaty, you will subsequently receive foreign tax credit at home before applying local rules.

Next: Marital Status - How should you report?

Concerns raised over EU gas cartels

The EU's energy commissioner, Andris Piebalgs, in a visit to Lisbon has warned against the creation of a natural gas cartel, saying the gas market would "only develop with competition".

"I appeal that there be no advance towards this (cartel) solution because for the gas market to function it must be liberalised, without price conditioning", Piebalgs told journalists after a speech to a Lisbon conference on renewable energy.

He noted that, despite recent Russian and Algerian statements to the contrary, the possibility of a gas cartel arising should not be excluded, a scenario that deeply worries Western Europe and the United States.

Russian media reported Monday that five leading gas producers, including Russia, would set up "a gas OPEC" on April 9 in Doha, United Arab Emirates.

Earlier, Piebalgs told the Diário Económico Conference on Renewable Energy that EU countries that still applied regulatory energy tariffs, like Portugal, should "abandon them as quickly as possible". TPN/Lusa

Peter Wainwright Trophy on a Spring day

On Friday 16th March, Tagus Golf Society played The Peter Wainwright Trophy - Mens Pairs Competition (best combined stableford score) and the Doreen Wainwright Trophy - Ladies Individual competition (best stableford).

It was a glorious Spring day and the playing conditions were perfect. Auke Bos and Francisco Leite Monteiro took third place with 58 stableford points, Uwe Wilck and Denys Stormont came in second with 59 stableford points, but first place was won by Max Zimmerli and Derek McIvor with a convincing 65 points. Indeed, Max retained the title from last year when he paired up with Ron Goddard - is there a third partner out there who could help him win three times in a row?

In the ladies competition Dine

Reksten came third with 31 stableford points, Karin Dekker took second place with 33 points, but Sally Buxton came in with 39 points, thereby retaining the trophy for a second year.

Anita Beselin and Adolf Krombholz were both awarded the Captain's prize for the best scores on the four holes rated most difficult on the course and not having appeared in the prizes. The Longest Drive for men was won by Denys Stormont, and by Anita Beselin for the ladies, whilst Hilário Sanches skillfully placed the ball Nearest the Pin on the 2nd hole.

If the excellent weather and good golf wasn't enough we went on to enjoy a wonderful lunch on the terrace at our very own Estoril Golf Club. Our thanks go to Sr. Pedro whose cuisine was, as always, excellent; the food, wine, company and spectacular views towards the bay of Cascais meant we were well and truly spoiled.

Our next event - the Cottam Plate and Kittila Trophy - will be played at Estoril on Friday 20th April.

Quinta da Ria tees off EAST Benefit Tournament

Not only is the Quinta da Ria one of Europe's premier golf resorts, as CEO Jose F. Lisboa explained to fascinated EAST students in a morning assembly, it is also a committed partner in the community of Tavira, ensuring that its courses are built and run in an environmentally friendly way and extending support to community initiatives like EAST itself.

In typically modest fashion, Sr Lisboa did not describe the full extent of Quinta da Ria's generosity in its initial and ongoing monthly support of the school, but was delighted to tell the children (keen golfers among them) that Quinta da Ria is sponsoring and hosting the first EAST Benefit Golf Tournament, in aid of the school, on Saturday 7th April 2007, with the organisational support of the Clube de Golfe do Levante.

'We are proud that Quinta da Ria is an international resort which welcomes people of all nations, inviting them to share in our enjoyment of the Eastern Algarve,' said Sr Lisboa. 'At EAST, children from Portugal, Spain, England, Ireland, Germany and elsewhere join together in a community of learning that reflects the needs, colourful character and tolerant spirit of the wider community of Tavira, of which we at the Quinta da Ria are a part. We are delighted to honour the aspirations of the future with this fantastic tournament.'

EAST is not run for profit, but rather as School Manager Ana Maria Pimenta comments, 'focuses on the needs of the children we are so lucky to work with. It is through the generosity and support of our friends and partners in the community, like Quinta da Ria, our wonderful parents, and our creative and committed staff, that we are able to offer our young people a truly international learning experience, and one that is rich, varied and responsive to the future. This tournament will be a celebration of the school and of Tavira, and we cannot thank Quinta da Ria, the Clube de Golfe do Levante, and José and Lisa

Sr Jose F. Lisboa, CEO of Quinta da Ria

Lisboa enough'.

The tournament is open to all golfers and will be of the 4 ball better ball Stableford form. It will run from tee 1 and tee 10 with starting times from 12.00 to 12.50. Maximum handicaps for men and women are 36, the green fee is €50 per player and there will be prizes for the winner, post game drinks and a raffle.

Cecelia loves drawing

Cecelia is a sweet little girl, her Sotho name is Tebello. She is 6 years old, tiny, and attends the local Primary School. She loves to draw pictures and to watch the Friday night video.

The favourite movies are Shrek 2 and Spirit. Fifty-five children of all ages huddle around my small TV screen and happily munch popcorn! If our numbers continue to increase, we shall need a larger screen!

Cecelia came to stay at our Children's Centre in August last year. Her Mom McMatebello died and in the very same week her Aunt McMathabiso also died. Both were TB related deaths which probably means an HIV infection, because TB is treatable. Most orphans in Lesotho live with extended families, often with their elderly grandparents. These girls have no grandparents. Cecelia and her sister Emily should have gone to live with their Aunt, but this was not possible, as she had died.

One Uncle remains - Uncle Lucky, his wife and their small baby. He is a local shepherd, so there is no regular source of income. An adult shepherd is paid in animals at the end of each year. A good season with a large flock to tend, should bring the shepherd between 3 and 10 young sheep or goats. It is a hard job with a very basic lifestyle: there are no extras. They could not hope to feed, school, and clothe these two, plus their young cousins.

They arrived at our door with their two little cousins, Amelia and Agnes. Agnes is the oldest at 12. All were underweight in threadbare clothes. They rarely smiled. They had little to smile about. Today they laugh and play and are a delight to us all. You should see them climb and swing on our jungle-gym. For the first time, they are able to enjoy a childhood.

We do not shave their heads, although the schools are doing it this year. They say it looks cleaner, but maybe it is to keep down head lice. We are now using Protex soap for all the children, which is very effective and has put an end to all our scabies and lice problems. Thank God!

Soon winter will be here, our coldest month is June. We live at almost 3,000 metres, and the temperature in the high mountains here in Semonkong will often drop below minus 10 degrees centigrade.

The lowest recorded temperature was minus 23 degrees, and that is seriously cold! Our children sleep in duvets and thick blankets. They also wear blankets as an overcoat, as do the entire mountain population. I was given a beautiful thick blanket by the local villagers and told that I wasn't properly dressed without one!

We need many blankets. We cannot have too many as we pass them on to the poorest local village children.

Compassion for Lesotho's Aids orphans

Jill Kinsey is a missionary with a heart for the destitute, especially children.

In February 2006, under the authority of the Lesotho Methodist Church, Jill officially opened a Children's Centre in Semonkong, to alleviate the suffering of the 2,000 AIDS orphans in the area. Initially 21 of the most desperate orphans, between the ages of 6 and 14 years of age, were given a place to live.

Today that number has grown to 41 children. The youngest being two-year old Margaret. Semonkong consists of 84 rural villages in Lesotho, Southern Africa.

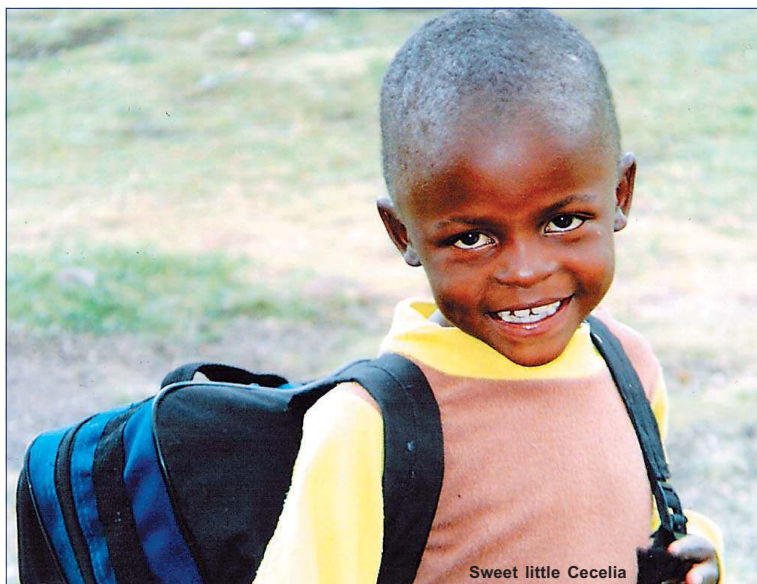

The Centre is funded entirely by gifts or donations.

Three ways to ... make a child with chickenpox more comfortable

1. Cut fingernails so he can't scratch the spots as much.
2. Try oatmeal baths, using oatmeal-based products like Aveeno, which can help soothe itching.
3. Put cool flannels over the spots.

Symptoms of Chickenpox

A red, itchy rash on the skin that usually appears first on the abdomen or back and face, and then spreads to almost everywhere else on the body, including the scalp, mouth, nose, ears, and genitals. It begins as multiple small, red bumps that look like pimples or insect bites. They develop into thin-walled blisters filled with clear fluid, which becomes cloudy. The blister wall breaks, leaving open sores, which finally crust over to become dry, brown scabs.

Contagiousness

Chickenpox is contagious from about 2 days before the rash appears and lasts until all the blisters are crusted over. A child with chickenpox should be kept out of school until all blisters have dried, usually about 1 week. If unsure, ask your doctor.

Call the doctor if your child:

- *has fever that lasts for more than 4 days or rises above 102° Fahrenheit (38.8° Celsius);
- *has a severe cough or trouble breathing;
- *has an area of rash that leaks pus (thick, discolored fluid) or becomes red, warm, swollen, or sore;
- *has a severe headache;
- *is unusually drowsy or has trouble waking up;
- *has trouble looking at bright lights;
- *has difficulty walking;
- *seems confused;
- *seems very ill or is vomiting;
- *has a stiff neck.

Call your doctor if you think your child has chickenpox, if you have a question, or if you're concerned about a possible complication. The doctor can guide you in watching for complications and in choosing medication to relieve itching.

Taking your home life to the office

With British actress Kate Winslet and film director husband Sam Mendes planning to work together for the first time on a new film, we talk to the experts about the pros and cons of working with your partner.

Although they share everything from living space to household finances, most couples draw the line at sharing their offices, seeing working together as a sure-fire recipe for relationship meltdown.

Indeed, Oscar-winning actress Rachel Weisz's fiancé admits he was initially reluctant to involve her in his sci-fi movie, The Fountain, because he was afraid it may hurt their real life romance, according to Hong Kong magazine Prestige.

"I wasn't interested in casting Rachel because I have a relationship with her and you know it's a gamble," said director Darren Aronofsky.

"Either the relationship would be over or the relationship would be fine. Why risk something like that?"

However, both Weisz and Aronofsky say making the film was a "great experience", and now British actress Kate Winslet and her husband Sam Mendes are also planning to collaborate on a film for the very first time.

American Beauty director Mendes has just bought an option to make a movie about the life of 1920s circus tiger tamer Mabel Stark, casting his wife of six years in the starring role.

Nevertheless, whether a glamorous Hollywood couple or an average Mr and Mrs, husband-wife partnerships in the workplace are no guarantee of commercial, professional or even personal success, and even the strongest couples have to work hard to make the distinction between work and home life.

"You simply can't translate your romantic relationship into a working relationship and expect the same rules to apply because they don't," explains relationship expert Lynda Field, author of Weekend Life Coach (www.weekendlifecoach.com). "Obviously you have to trust each other, but if you have both worked separately before then you tend to view that professional independence as your personal identity within the marriage, and it can be very hard to relinquish control of that."

The Cons

"When you first begin working together, any underlying insecurities, both professional and personal, are brought to the surface. They can stem from anything, like suddenly being told what to do or being quizzed on aspects of your work that have never been called into question before," Field warns.

"In fact, working with a partner often brings out the inner critic in us, and initially we are likely to feel that we're losing control by sharing the reins with somebody else.

"This fear of abandoning control will obviously rock the boat and negatively affect the relationship unless clear and defined communication skills are in place right from the very beginning."

Standing your ground over work-related issues is very important in order to maintain boundaries within your relationship, but Field says it is vital to leave all work-related issues in the office at the end of the day.

"In a way it forces you to take a fresh look at your relationship because any old issues that are unresolved will come up pretty quickly, believe me!"

"For example, if one of you feels put upon domestically and then feels that they have been assigned an unfair share of tasks at work, there will almost definitely be fireworks.

"It is essential to create a clear and tightly defined workplace relationship with your partner, and never take how you manage the household or your relationship into the office environment with you, or vice versa," she advises.

"For example, don't talk about a new business strategy while you are having dinner, and never, ever discuss any work issues in bed!"

The Pros

The great thing about working with a partner who you trust and love is that you know you will be supported and are free to express personal feelings about business decisions to a certain extent, according to Field.

"Having what should be your biggest fan working with you means you will have home-grown support at your fingertips almost immediately," she says.

"Plus, there is no workplace bullying here as you have the safety and comfort of knowing exactly who you are working with.

"You also have the advantage of working flexi-hours, and even childcare issues can be worked out if you both work together from home."

The fact that both parties have a common goal in mind - the overall success of the company and the partnership - means that working together can even give your business the competitive edge, Field says.

"Remember, this is a joint venture and so what's good for you is essentially good for you both, financially, emotionally and otherwise.

"As long as you have created the proper boundaries for working together it's a win-win situation, and if you are both happy in the environment that you have created then your relationship will flourish, as will your business," she adds.

Six Top Tips For Working In Harmony

To ensure that personal and business relationships are as harmonious as possible when working together, it is vital to establish a good working relationship right from the start by involving your partner in both decision-making and problem solving.

- Acknowledge your partner's abilities and talents on a regular basis.

- Make sure you have your own areas of responsibility relating to your particular strengths.

- Avoid expressing criticism of your partner's mistakes and praise your partner's efforts.

- Respect the role that your partner has in the business and the work that they do.

- Take time to celebrate your business successes together.

- Recognise that you and your partner will both, at times, need space.

- Courtney Cox met hubby David Arquette on the set of Scream 11 years ago. The loved-up duo liked working together so much that they went on to make two sequels.

- The story may have been about two gay men but the real romance was off-screen when Michelle Williams met Heath Ledger on the set of Brokeback

Boost your border with summer bulbs

among shrubs or perennials or in pots on the patio. It prefers well-drained, fertile soil with lots of added organic matter in a dappled sunny spot, but with its roots shaded.

Using summer-flowering bulbs is a good way of adding interest and variety to a border without using up extra space. Shrubs and hedges make a good backdrop to show off a summer display. Plant bulbs such as allium to emerge through the foliage of spring-flowering herbaceous plants or emerging through wild grasses to extend the flowering season.

Summer-flowering bulbs originate from sub-tropical regions such as South Africa and South America. They like warm temperatures and humid conditions, and usually are not winter hardy. In general summer bulbs fall into the category of tender bulbs, which do not perennialise in areas that experience frost in winter.

In mild areas, dahlia tubers can be planted outside in early spring, covered with about 10cm of soil. In colder northern regions, delay planting until later in April as many summer-flowering bulbs should be planted in controlled conditions such as a greenhouse, so that they're not exposed to the elements, although lilies are an exception. It may seem like hard work, but by taking extra care of these plants and keeping them under cover until the last frosts have passed, you should be rewarded by a spectacular summer display.

Hannah Stephenson

You may now be enjoying the last of the spring bulbs but already it's time to think about planting some summer-flowering bulbs for colour and scent later in the year.

For me, among the most glorious of summer-flowering bulbs are lilies, and in particular Lilium regale, the regal lily, which recently came top in a closely fought contest hosted by the Netherlands Flower Bulb Information Centre to find the Summer Bulb of the Year 2007.

scented lily has stunning, flared-trumpet flowers that burst open to reveal pretty white petals with a yellow centre and dark pink stripes on the outside, growing on the top of long stems.

It's a versatile bloom, working well in both classic and contemporary gardens, although I think it looks best grown in clumps

What's in Store

Now is the time to think of summer colour and you will find that the garden centres are now ablaze with plenty of plants to choose from. Buying plants that are in flower rather than growing them from seed gives you the opportunity to colour coordinate your garden.

» The genus Impatiens is also commonly known as Busy Lizzie or Balsam. It is a large family of plants that originated in warm temperate or tropical regions but perhaps some of the best for summer bedding are the New Guinea hybrids that are improved cultivars that will flower for many months from now until late in the autumn. We have had some that also flowered spasmodically throughout the winter months. Flowers can range through the pinks to red, the pale peaches to orange plus lavender and white. They grow best in a rich humus based soil mixture and need to be kept moist during the hot summer months. They have a spread of up to approximately 30cm with a height of 35cm. They do benefit from a monthly application of liquid fertiliser during the active growing and flowering period. These are usually grown as annuals as they do need protection if the temperature drops below 5°C.

» Osteospermums are also very rewarding. Many of you may remember that some of these were known as Dimorphotheca and in some nurseries may still be sold as such. The range of colour for these 'daisy like' flowers is from white through yellow and pinks to purple. Some more recent cultivars are whitish with purple centres and petals that are spoon-shaped, thus giving them the name of 'Whirlygig'. These are taller growing plants than the Impatiens with a spread and height of 60cm or more. The flowers are best trimmed off once they have died to encourage continuous flowering. These need a moderately fertile soil mixture and to be grown in full sun. They do need watering on a weekly basis during the hot summer months and to be given an application of liquid fertiliser on a monthly basis. If strong frosts are expected it is advisable to protect them.

» Petunias are very popular and come in a wide variety of pinks, reds, whites and purples with many bicoloured flowers. These need very similar soil conditions to the Impatiens and need a sunny position but do suffer from windy situations. During the summer they do need watering on a regular basis with fertiliser given every two weeks during the active growing period. Flowering is prolonged by deadheading regularly. Usually used as annuals they do not tolerate frost.

From plot to plate

Swiss Chard

Its vibrant stems in shades of yellow, red, orange, pink and white make it a fabulous addition to a salad or steamed as a hot vegetable and is a good alternative to spinach - and has a wow factor planted at the front of a flower bed. Good varieties include 'Bright Lights' and 'Rhubarb Chard'.

If you want winter leaves sow in late summer in an open site on fertile, moist soil, sowing thinly into a wide drill. Hoe regularly to keep the area weed-free and water well during dry weather, although the plant will withstand some drought once it is well established. Cover with cloches in the colder regions of Portugal during the winter for the best leaves.

Swiss chard is best cut little and often. It will bolt in warm weather or if it's not regularly cut, but is pretty strong and can be chopped back to produce good leaves again. Large leaves should be harvested for cooking as you need them, but don't cut too close to the plant. The tough stalks should be cooked separately as they take longer to cook than the leaves, or chopped up and thrown in the steamer a few minutes before the leaves. Alternatively, chuck the chopped stalks into a stir-fry for colour and interest.

Three ways to ...

Keep rabbits out

1. Put up a rabbit-proof fence around the garden from mesh wire netting, around 1.20m in height and an additional 35cm below ground level.
2. Choose plants that are relatively resistant to rabbits, including euphorbia and dahlia.
3. Use proprietary animal repellents to keep rabbits away from plants.

Ecossistemas; where man's design and natural beauty merge

It is often said that 'true beauty is found not on the outside but on the inside'. However, where landscaping is concerned, it is quite the opposite.

Quite frequently, the exterior of a development or a home is the first thing that catches other people's attention. A stunning outdoor area can mean the difference between a successful, memorable establishment, or a poorly presented property.

Gardens and landscapes are generally what create any given location's first impression or so-called calling card, and what visitors will remember most. Scents, colors, textures and layouts are all key elements to be considered when creating a landscape; elements that plant and landscaping specialist company Ecossistemas is fully aware of and has been specializing in for over 16 years.

The company's impressive CV now comprises a number of large-scale projects carried out for some of the Algarve's most prominent resorts and localities, and the commissioning of larger and more significant projects just keep coming in.

A more recent project saw the company create stunning gardens for the Sheraton Pine Cliffs Resort, Albufeira.

Specializing in the creation of 'green spaces' (gardens, sports areas, parks and other projects), Ecossistemas also boast expertise in irrigation systems, from creating layouts right through to installations and respective equipment and accessories, to back-up and maintenance services.

Creating a landscape that both suits and flatters the architectural style of buildings round which it is situated, and developing comfortable climate conditions to reduce seasonal effects are but two guidelines the company uses when creating designs. Correctly using natural supplies found on-site and striving to take care of surrounding environments are also priorities.

Furthermore, Ecossistemas

has developed a tree salvaging service where trees of historical or regional importance, for example centuries-old olive trees, that otherwise would be destined for excavation are 'rescued' and transplanted to the company's warehouse. From there the trees are sold and delivered all around the world, to countries including China, Dubai and Australia.

For more information, contact Ecossistemas on: (+351) 282 799 537, fax: 282 799 840, or see websites www.ecossistemas.com, or www.oliveiradeportugal.com.

David Wilson, creating homes, not just houses

David Wilson has been in the Algarve for more than 10 years now. Having initially established a successful business in drainage systems, for the past two years he has been battling to obtain an alvará, the necessary legal document that allows David to develop property under his own guidance.

The sleepless nights, countless headaches and exorbitant legal fees have finally paid off. Never one to give up, David believed in his company and the quality of its services enough to hold out where many others would have packed in and given up. Attaining an alvará is a major achievement, given the present system, though he would have it no other way.

Complying with regulations is something that David Wilson fiercely believes in, and he is also a member of the British Portuguese Chamber of Commerce.

With over 24 years in the construction business, following in the footsteps of his father, a civil engineer in reinforced concrete and steel, and his grandfather, who built housing estates, experience has shown that aiming for quality rather than quantity can often be a more rewarding approach to construction.

Whatever size property you desire, of whatever style or design, David Wilson strives to take your vision from fantasy to reality, with the aid of an on-board team of architects, engineers and advisors.

His belief in quality over quantity has led David Wilson's company to focus on the lower end of the property market, specialising in construction under the €500,000 mark, offering value for money as well as efficiency and professionalism.

Extensions and renovations are also possible.

Another side of David Wilson's services is landscaping and groundwork.

David has always been passionate about equipment and machinery, since childhood, so even now he continuously invests time and money in modern technology, as well as staff training and qualifications in the roles they are assigned.

A recent venture will see the company import UK-standard scaffolding to Portugal to be hired by other companies. It has been proven that English scaffolding, when used by trained workers, can speed up production by 20 per cent.

Whilst the company's construction services cover the development of properties from scratch, as well as plumbing, electrics, tiling, plaster-boarding, stucco effect finishes and suspended ceilings, the groundwork services also cover a wide variety of options for outside the home. These can include roads, calçada, walls, paths, gardens and landscape design, drainage, and machine hire with driver.

Timberworks and Spray-tarring are also catered for.

No project is too large or too small for David Wilson's team of professionals to happily undertake. For more information, call David Wilson (ALVARA no. 55928) on: (+351) 917 227 087, or 282 489 579.

Alan Gale Denture Repairs... a very good reason to smile!

If you are considering replacing your existing dentures, Alan Gale is the expert to consult. Offering a fully guaranteed service with dependable back up and customer care, including after hours and weekend emergency cover, the following information has also been supplied to be followed as a guideline.

According to Alan Gale, one of the first things to take into consideration when thinking of replacing dentures is appearance.

The correct shade, size and position of the teeth are vital. Partial denture wearers need to match exactly existing teeth. The same applies to upper/lower denture wearers. Appearance can be copied from existing dentures, or a photograph. Sunken features can be restored, and clear palates can be incorporated.

Now that's something to smile about!

Secondly, another important factor is the fit. There is no point in having the correct appearance if the dentures do not fit properly.

Partial denture wearers should never have a problem with the fit, with the addition of clasps that can now be made in flexible acrylic, to the exact shade of existing teeth. The palate or frame can be made in chrome, gold, or acrylic.

Suction is maintained in edentulous upper dentures. Lower dentures are greatly helped by positioning the teeth correctly and contouring the acrylic to accommodate cheeks and tongue.

Also the addition of a soft lining to the fit side helps cushion the gums if they are sensitive to acrylic.

Following this is bite (articulation); the balance of the bite is paramount, not only to chew food (digestion), but also to aid (stabilize) the fit, and feel of the denture. An incorrect or worn bite is one of the major causes of dentures breaking!

Where concerning durability, dentures or teeth that frequently break can be made with chrome, or gold bases that are unbreakable.

Denture bases can be made in virtually unbreakable acrylic in various shades, and the teeth themselves can also be made in acrylic or porcelain.

One of the most important aspects of good denture maintenance is aftercare. All of Alan Gale's dentures are guaranteed for one year against breakage, wear, and fit. Advice on cleaning, plus a free clean and polish after one year will be provided. Repair services for broken dentures can be completed in one or two hours maximum. A two-day emergency service for lost dentures (it does happen!) is also available, and spare or copy dentures will enjoy up to 50 per cent discount. AFPOP members also benefit from a 5 per cent discount.

And the main piece of advice is: Keep Smiling! For more information call Alan Gale on: (+351) 282 442 302, or mobile: 916 717 113.

Response to Sue Johnson (Motorhomes go glam) March 2007 issue

SIR, What a sad person she is, wishing to impose fines on motorhomers, the majority of whom are elderly people. They have done their duty, paid their taxes, worked all their lives raising families etc. and are now retired.

They have invested their life savings in a motorhome, enabling them to leave the dismal, winter months of their own countries. The milder climates of Spain and Portugal bring relief to those suffering from arthritis, chest problems and similar ailments.

Obviously, whilst touring in these countries in out of season months, they spend money on fuel, food, drink, laundry, repairs to vehicles, gifts to take home etc. Limited income prohibits dining out every day, however, at least twice a week in the norm. Therefore, they contribute to the economy by way of small businesses instead of hotel conglomerates, who take their profits out of the country.

As for "wild camping" as she terms it - what harm are they doing? They park up and enjoy the beauty of the surroundings. When they go, they leave it clean and take nothing away but good memories. Spanish and Portuguese nationals are polite and considerate to them. It appears that only ex-pats who retain their "British intolerance" mentality, even though living in a country with a different view, seem to have a problem. I can only assume that Sue is one of them.

Oh by the way, Sue, do not suggest they should be on campsites - what would they see of the countries or different cultures stuck in a fenced forest?

MARGARET RADDON, UK (Please do not publish my home address, I hate junk mail).

Thanks

SIR, Last Friday afternoon I had the misfortune to suffer an alternator failure when on my way to Lagos for a matriculation inspection of my UK registered car. Through your pages may I thank the very kind Portuguese girl who stopped to offer assistance while I was waiting for the tow truck? I am ashamed to say I never found out her name, but she was most helpful and even offered to drive me into Lagos to find the necessary replacement parts. At the same time, may I also raise a metaphorical two fingers to the eight or nine UK registered motor-home owners who sailed by with their noses in the air, probably on their way to an illegal camping pitch for the night. I pray the GNR fines them all to within an inch of their miserable bank balances.

CLIVE STOTT, By e-mail

Ref: senile rantings

SIR, Someone should explain to Mike Hentall that the senile 'rantings' he moans about are only opinions he doesn't happen to agree with.

Regarding his silent alarm clock experiences, I can report that I too wake up around three am each morning. At my age, the reason is probably a dodgy prostate and my distressed bladder is just sounding the alarm - "Take a leak Ron before you piddle the bed!" So perhaps, like me, he's just overdue a rebore. Oh, and like his wife, mine also wakes up at the same time too, but only because I have disturbed her. Does this mundane explanation match either of his "pet theories that are not for discussion here"?

Carl Taylor, advising us of his many years of homosexual activity, is another who doesn't seem too happy about the opinions of a lot of us old-timers either and implies that being males over 60 we are now reduced to trying to play snooker with a piece of rope. Well, if he lives as long as we have, his turn will come! Writing as someone who smokes, drinks and 'enjoys every day that comes' he hopes that we won't ever meet. So do I.

With the anniversary of Britain's abolition of slavery upon us, yet again we are being urged to apologise for the actions of our ancestors. What a load of rubbish! Are the African tribes who hunted down, captured and put the first chains around their neighbours' necks marching about beating their breasts? And how long before we see mass protests about the excesses of the Inquisition or murderous events like the French revolution or the Roman Empire's idea of entertainment? None of that was anything to do with us but there are plenty of current atrocities meriting attention.

RON LAVERY, By e-mail

Gasoline station closings

SIR, Does anyone know why we have so many small gasoline stations closing in the Sintra area?

I have noted more than 3 closings in my immediate neighborhood.

GILBERT WELLS, Azenhas do Mar

Religion not the answer

SIR, Hallelujah! I am sure that not many readers will regret your decision to drop letters on the never-ending religious debate!

The subject is not only boring, but pretty pointless. It is most unlikely that any believer could ever be persuaded to change their beliefs through discussion or negotiation. As Gwynne Dyer implied in last week's issue, religion is the problem, not the answer:

GEORGE RUSH, Faro

Dear James Ross ...

SIR, Dear James, we are really sorry if you thought we were attacking either you or your church (17th March) as we have quite an affection for you! You should know by now that our object in contributing letters to The Portugal News is never to knowingly attack or be discourteous to anyone, but to try and write facts and/or beliefs as we know them, answer or pose questions or cause readers to think or investigate further the subjects under discussion.

Our understanding is that the RC Church teaches the act of sexual intercourse should only be indulged in to procreate children: if this is not so, we apologize and stand corrected. The reason we mentioned it was because the question posed by Alara Twine (10th March) was prompted by comments about Mary's need for redemption because 'her conception resulted from the co-mingling of both sexes'.

As Bible believing Christians, we know that nowhere in the scriptures is there mention of the canonization of saints, the immaculate conception of Mary or her perpetual virginity. If James really knows his Bible, he can find within its pages clear information about Mary and Joseph having at least seven children following the birth of Jesus.

As a regular reader of The Portugal News, how can James say we have not written in defence of creation, theism or Christianity? To answer a further accusation, we have never thought or written that 'Catholicism is a greater evil than atheism or abortion' or given our views on ecumenism.

We know, love and pray for Pastor Eddie Fernandez, his Bikers and his church - Riverside - but as we live in Alvor, were not able to participate in the march through Lisbon last month.

TONY & LOIS HERRINGTON, Alvor

Response to Dyer & Baugh

SIR, So Gwynne Dyer doesn't have a high opinion of religion (Christianity). Has he ever read history? Pre-Christian societies like the Aztecs and Romans were pretty hard on slaves, women and non-members.

Post-Christian systems such as Revolutionary France, Nazi Germany, and Communism weren't so nice either. I would suggest Dyer reading De Toqueville.

Since religious (and hopefully anti-religious) discussion is being excluded from the letters page, I had better take this last chance to give Michael Baugh the chapter and verse he has been asking for; John 8:58.

Jesus claimed to be God. Baugh is correct. Greek has a word for "brother" and another word for "cousin". And yes, the New Testament was written in Greek. But not by Greeks! The Jews, who wrote the New Testament transliterated the Hebrew idiom into Greek. Jesus' "brothers" were his kinsmen. Even Luther, Calvin, Zwingli and Wesley would agree with me on Mary's perpetual virginity. Enuff said.

I agree with The Portugal News' move. It seems what should have been an open and honest discussion had degenerated away down. Terms like "dead Palestinian Jewess (Mary)", "mariolatrous prayers" and referring to article of Faith as "Ludicrous" were being used solely to give offense.

JAMES ROSS, By e-mail

Believers United v Doubters Athletic

SIR, And the debate continues with your letters page aflame with righteous conviction and scathing scepticism. Now it's my turn.

When I was a child some seventy years ago I was led to believe that the Almighty was omnipresent and omniscient and think that if this is true he will understand the heretical thought processes of myself and others better than either Mr Ross or the Pope. If, on the other hand, the entire fabric of our belief system is nothing but a glorious fiction with no basis in fact, then it really doesn't matter in the slightest.

ALAN THOMAS, By e-mail

Response to cruelty of animals

SIR, Having read your newspaper on returning to the UK about a school teacher chaining her dog up and leaving it to starve, apart from the appalling cruelty of this situation and very upsetting for us, that such a situation can occur, also without any prosecution taking place against this woman.

Surely this would be a deterrent. Apparently this cruelty goes on all the time according to an expat lady we met, and [there is] the problem also of 'strays', which we noted in the newspaper some people are concerned and trying to do something about - this is very good.

We are considering buying property there, but with other friends and family, this situation is putting us off. I hope you print this, I think people should be informed, as we have also experienced strays with travellers behind our hotel.

I was somewhat surprised at this lovely area ('Golden Triangle') with golf courses and beaches and quite expensive property to have this problem, but perhaps the Portuguese are cruel to their pets and very litter orientated.

MRS. SAGE, Eastleigh, Hampshire, UK

As warned last week, after this edition we will be dropping the continuous religious debate for the time being.

Portuguese for all

Na lição de hoje vamos estudar a estrutura 'haver de + infinitivo'.

Até à próxima lição, Emília Rosendo.

Today's lesson focuses on 'haver de + infinitivo'. This is used to express certainty and to show that one's mind has been made up or a decision has been made, as follows:

Eu hei-de descobrir a verdade.
(I will certainly find out the truth.)
Eu hei-de ser mais tolerante.

Let us now see how 'haver de' is conjugated in Presente do Indicativo.

eu	hei-de	nós	havemos de

Electronic birth registries now in hospitals throughout Portugal

As of this week, babies born in a number of district hospitals around the country can be instantly registered thanks to an innovative, automatic registrar.

An initial blueprint for the system was developed in 2000, though was deemed ineffective as the registered information was written on paper, making the process more elaborate.

The new procedure, named 'Nascer Cidadão' will be a free, electronic process which will allow, as of September, all newborns to be immediately signed up to the social security and health services.

Still in an experimental phase, at present only a handful of national hospitals can offer the facility.

These include Faro Hospital, hospital Bissaya Barreto (Coimbra), Júlio Dinis (Oporto), Alfredo da Costa (Lisbon) and Garcia da Orta (Almada).

As of this week all babies born in the hospitals can be legally registered, waving a parent's need to go to the local registry office.

In a second phase, ongoing until September, the São Marcos Hospital (Braga), Senhora da Oliveira (Guimarães), Coimbra University Hospitals (HUC), São Francisco Xavier and Santa Maria Hospitals (both in Lisbon) and the Hospital Padre Américo (Penafiel) will also be equipped with the facility.

Iran: How to start a war

"I don't want to second-guess the British after the fact," said US Navy Lieutenant-Commander Erik Horner, "but our rules of engagement allow a little more latitude. Our boarding team's training is a little bit more towards self-preservation." Does that mean that one of his American boarding teams would have opened fire if it had been them in the two inflatable boats that were surrounded by Iranian Revolutionary Guard fast patrol boats off the coast of Iraq last Friday? "Agreed. Yes."

Just as well that it was a British boarding team, then. The fifteen British sailors and marines who were captured and taken to Tehran for "questioning" last week are undoubtedly having an unpleasant time, but they are alive, and Britain is only involved in two wars, in Iraq and Afghanistan. If it had been one of Erik Horner's boarding teams, they would all be dead, and the United States and Iran would now be at war.

Lt-Cdr Horner is the executive officer of the USS Underwood, the American frigate that works together with HMS Cornwall, the British ship that the captive boarding party came from. Interviewed after the incident by Terri Judd of "The Independent," the only British print journalist on HMS Cornwall, he was obviously struggling to be polite about the gutless Brits, but he wasn't having much success.

"The US Navy rules of engagement say we have not only a right to self-defence but also an obligation to self-defence," Horner explained. "(The British) had every right in my mind and every justification to defend themselves rather than allow themselves to be taken. Our reaction was, Why didn't your guys defend themselves?"

So there they are, eight sailors and seven marines in two rubber boats, with personal weapons and no protection whatever, sitting about a foot (300 cm) above the water, surrounded by six or seven Iranian attack boats with mounted machine guns. "Defend yourself" by opening fire, and after a single long burst from half a dozen heavy machine-guns there will be fourteen dead young men and one dead young woman in two rapidly sinking inflatables, and your country will be at war. Seems a bit pointless, really.

It's a cultural thing, at bottom.

Britain has a long history of fighting wars and taking casualties, but the combat doctrines are less hairy-chested. British rules of engagement "are very much de-escalatory, because we don't want wars starting," explained Admiral Sir Alan West, former First Sea Lord. "Rather than roaring into action and sinking everything in sight we try to step back, and that, of course, is why our chaps were...able to be captured and taken away."

That emollient British approach is probably why the Iranian Revolutionary Guard chose to grab British troops rather than Americans. It was obviously a snatch operation: the Iranians would not normally have half a dozen attack boats ready to go even if some "coalition" boat checking Iraq-bound ships for contraband did stray across the invisible dividing line into Iranian waters (which the British insist they didn't).

But it was not necessarily an operation ordered from the top of Iran's government. In fact, there is no single source of authority in Iran's curious system of "multiple governments," as one observer labelled the impenetrably complex division of responsibilities and powers between elected civilians and unelected mullahs. The Revolutionary Guards (who are quite different from the regular armed forces) enjoy considerable autonomy within this system.

According to the US authorities in Iraq, the five Iranian diplomats arrested by US troops in a raid in Irbil in Iraqi Kurdistan last January were actually Revolutionary Guards, and it would seem that their colleagues want them back. Kidnapping American troops as hostages for an exchange could cause a war, so they decided to grab some Brits instead. And it will probably work, after a certain delay.

In this episode, the American reputation for belligerence served US troops well, diverting Iranian attention to the British instead. In the larger scheme of things, it is a bit more problematic.

A quite similar snatch operation against the equally belligerent Israelis last July led to a month-long Israeli aerial bombardment of Lebanon and a retaliatory hail of Hezbollah rockets on northern Israeli cities. Well over a thousand people were dead by the end, although nothing was settled.

Any day now, a minor clash along Iraq's land or sea frontier with Iran could kill some American troops and give President Bush an excuse to attack Iran, if he wants one—and he certainly seems to. If the Revolutionary Guards had got it wrong last Friday and attacked an American boarding party by mistake, he would have his excuse now, and bombs might already be falling on Iran. All the pieces are in place, and the war could start at any time.

Pick of the Day

Doctor Who (BBC1, 7pm)

The third series is only just about to begin, but according to recent reports, the fourth has already been commissioned - good news for those passionate about all things Tardis-related. However, whether Russell T Davies, the man behind the sci-fi series' revamp will still be working away behind the scenes is uncertain after he dropped hints about possible new projects in a recent interview. As any self-respecting fan will already know, the Doctor is currently without a travelling companion after being parted from Rose at the end of the last series, and being rebuffed by Catherine Tate's runaway bride in the Christmas edition. Here, we're about to be introduced to his new pal, Martha Jones, in this eagerly awaited opening instalment of the latest series. The Time Lord meets her during a trip to the Royal New Hope Hospital in London. Martha is a medical student, and he soon needs her help when a bunch of galactic stormtroopers known as the Judoon transport the medical institution to the Moon. Can the duo put a stop to the aliens' villainous scheme? David Tennant and Freema Agyeman star.

Play It Again (BBC1, 8pm)

Stars have sung for Comic Relief Does Fame Academy, argued in Celebrity Big Brother and created more than a bit of chemistry in Love Island and now BBC bosses have found another way to get them on the box. Learning to play a musical instrument is the challenge for six famous faces in this new reality format as they are taken out of their comfort zones and pushed into the world of electrical guitars, rock drums and saxophones. In this instalment, Frank Skinner attempts to overcome the banjo, a small, normally four-stringed instrument that looks a lot simpler to master than it is. Having never held one of them before, the comedian has got his work cut out if he wants to perfect the notoriously difficult musical device. Under the tutelage of his mentor Pete Stanley, the stand-up comic will have to become competent enough to perform in the international championships in Kansas, but as both the working and personal relationships between student and teacher begins to deteriorate, his chances of making it across the pond look increasingly unlikely.

Great British Menu (BBC2, 6.30pm)

It's trying pans at dawn time again as 14 of the nation's finest chefs battle it out in the second run of the series. The first edition sees Jennie Bond overseeing proceedings as hopefuls compete for a place in the national final by creating an original four-course menu consisting of a starter, fish course, main dish and dessert. Individuals taking part this time round are: Galton Blackiston, Sat Bains, Bryn Williams, Matt Tebbutt, Nick Naim, Jeremy Lee, Richard Corrigan, Noel McMeel, Atul Kochhar, Stuart Gillies, Michael Caines, Mark Hix, Marcus Wareing and Mark Broadbent. But who will walk off with the prize of travelling to France and the opportunity to cook for a dinner being held by British Ambassador Sir Peter Westmacott, and his wife, Susie - an event which will be attended by some of the best French chefs around? Heats will be judged by a panel of food experts - Prue Leith, Matthew Fort and Oliver Peyton - before the public get the chance to vote for their favourites and who goes forward to cook at the banquet.

Back to basics

DIY can seem daunting if you don't know where to begin. If you're new to decorating and about to start your first project, this supplement will help you get on your feet, filled with useful articles, advertorials, and quick questions and answers.

DIY can seem daunting if you don't know where to begin. If you're new to decorating and about to start your first project, here are some of the basics.

The first thing to learn is that good preparation is crucial to any job - and will take up most of your time.

Preparation is hard work, boring and thankless - you can have been preparing a surface for days and have very little to show for your efforts. You won't get a good end result, however, without thorough preparation. As Tony Blair might say, prepare, prepare, prepare.

Preparing Woodwork

Whether your wood is bare (untreated) or previously painted determines how you prepare it. With bare wood, the first job is to apply a coat of knot-sealing solution to each knot. This stops the resin in them bleeding through and ruining your paintwork.

The problem with bare wood is that water raises the grain, giving your paintwork a poor finish. So, instead of wiping away marks and sanding dust with a cloth moistened with water, use white spirit but be careful, as it can burn skin.

This isn't an issue with previously painted wood because the grain has been sealed by the paint.

Whatever type of surface you're painting, you must ensure that it's clean, dry, stable, grease and mark-free before you apply the paint. Stability is important - if you paint over something that could move, flake away or ruin the finish, like dust, all your hard work could be in vain.

Even if you're just touching up chipped or scratched paint, you need to sand the area first to see if any more paint comes away, then wipe clean and apply a little filler so the repair blends into the existing layers of paint. Once the filler has set, sand again, wipe clean and re-paint.

If your wood is already painted, thorough sanding is crucial, particularly if the existing paint is gloss.

When sanding, you want to remove the shininess that typifies a gloss finish, thus creating a 'key' for the new paint - paint adheres much better to matt surfaces than shiny ones, so sand as much as you humanly can, preferably with an electric sander.

The doorframes, window frames and skirting boards in period properties usually have intricate beading that an electric sander won't be able to get into, so use strips of sandpaper and elbow grease instead. Sanding should also get rid of any marks and dirt. Remember to clean the wood thoroughly after sanding.

If you want to be really thorough and remove the existing layers of paint to get back to the bare wood, use a paint-stripping liquid or gel and/or heat gun, taking lots of care to protect yourself and the surrounding surfaces, as both can be dangerous.

Whether you are building your home from scratch, or just looking to renovate it, this supplement should help you in every aspect of your home.

Be prepared for stripping to take a long time and be really fiddly - you'll need a good metal scraper, as well as detail ones for the intricate areas.

Once you've knot sealed bare wood, the next stage is to apply primer, undercoat and topcoat (gloss, satinwood or eggshell), though you can get combined products that dispense with one of these stages.

By far the easiest paint to use, whichever stage you're at, is quick-drying paint. This is water-based, unlike conventional wood and metal paints, which are oil-based, so it's much easier and nicer to apply and clean up (with water rather than white spirit or turps).

Oil-based paints take an age to dry - often days to achieve proper hardness - and that's just one coat.

While they're in the (lengthy) tacky drying stage, you and your clothes can easily stick to them, as can your kids and pets, insects, dust, dirt and other household debris. Tacky paint is a disaster waiting to happen.

Quick-drying paint, however, is dry before you know it, especially if you train a heater on it or have the heating on. You can do as many coats as you need to in a day, which can be quite a lot, depending on the quality of the paint and the colour you're painting over.

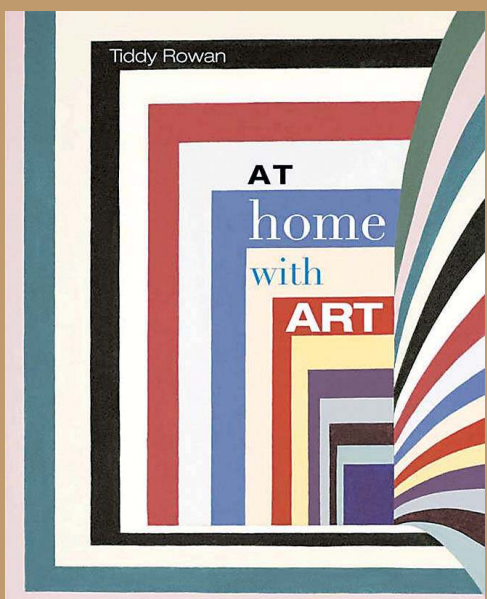

A good tip is to very lightly sand and wipe clean between coats if you notice that dust and debris have got mixed up in your paintwork.

You may think that one-coat paints are a better bet than quick-drying ones, but they rarely require one coat. Major paint manufacturers like Dulux and Crown offer money-back guarantees on these products, so you do have some recourse, but this doesn't necessarily make up for the extra time and effort you've expended, and they usually cost more in the first place.

One-coat paints seem like the ideal solution to time-pressed DIYers, especially when it gets dark so early, but they often leave you disappointed.

Useful book

For those always looking to change their home and give it a modern twist, a good book to look out for is 'At Home With Art' by Tiddy Rowan. It gives fantastic ideas on how to make your home look artistic, in a modern way. Andy Warhol fans will love it. (Photo: Press Association)

A plumb job for DIY fans

Undertaking plumbing work can seem pretty daunting if you're new to it, but you can save yourself a lot of money if you do some of the basics yourself and leave only more complicated work to a plumber.

If in any doubt, however, get a plumber in because doing it yourself would be a false economy, to say the least, if you end up flooding your home and/or your neighbours'.

If you are going to attempt some of the basics, start by familiarising yourself with the layout of the plumbing in your property. Knowing the location of the stopcock - the pipe that brings mains water into your home - is essential.

The location varies, but under the sink or stairs, or in the cellar are some of the most common places. It can also be outside in the front or back garden.

The mains water supply is fairly high pressure and comes in via a rising main pipe that connects to a cold water storage tank which is usually in the attic (not all heating/plumbing systems have this arrangement - combination boilers don't need a tank).

Your kitchen sink is connected, via a pipe, to the rising main, hence it's safe to drink that water, while the other taps and connections, including the hot water tank, are supplied by a low-pressure, gravity-fed system from the attic tank.

It's useful to find out if your home has isolating valves on the low-pressure pipes to the taps, toilet and appliances.

These enable you to shut off the water to one of these without turning it off at the mains. Look next to the storage tank in the attic for these valves.

If you ever have to make repairs to your system, you'll need to know how to drain parts of it. If you want to shut off the water supply to the kitchen sink, close the stopcock on the rising main and turn on the sink tap/s to get rid of any water left in the pipes.

To do the same in the bathroom, shut off the cold feed valve from the attic storage tank and run the bath and basin taps. If you don't have an isolating valve, you can shut off the water supply to the toilet cistern by placing a batten of wood across the top and tying the arm of the float valve to it.

If you need to drain the cistern, tie up the float valve and flush the loo.

Draining hot water taps is another matter. Start by switching off the immersion and central heating boiler, then shut off the water supply from the attic tank to the hot water tank and turn on the hot water taps to empty the pipes.

We may be having an unseasonably mild winter, but the occasional cold snaps can play havoc with your home's pipes. If the pipes aren't insulated, they're liable to freeze in cold weather, as they become blocked with ice, especially in the attic. Garden taps are also vulnerable to this.

You can tell if they're frozen if you turn the tap on and there simply isn't any water coming out.

Find where the blockage is by following the run of frozen pipes and then try to thaw them out. If the pipes are copper, use a hair dryer, warming the pipes gradually and working back from the affected valve or tap.

If you have older, lead pipes, ensure you warm them evenly. And if you don't have a hair dryer, use hot towels instead. The problem with lead pipes is that they're relatively soft and can split when frozen.

If this happens, you'll need a plumber to do repairs. To prevent serious damage, do something about frozen pipes as soon as you realise they're frozen.

And to stop it happening again, insulate the pipes as soon as you can.

The easiest form of insulation to use is split foam tubes, which you simply slip over the pipes. If you've got a long, straight run of pipes, ensure you butt the ends of the tubes together and secure them with self-adhesive PVC tape.

Alternatively, you can use lagging bandage, which you wrap round the pipes to insulate them, though this takes longer.

Unfortunately, of course, not all pipework is straight.

Make several cuts into a foam tube to fit it round a bend and then secure in place with PVC tape.

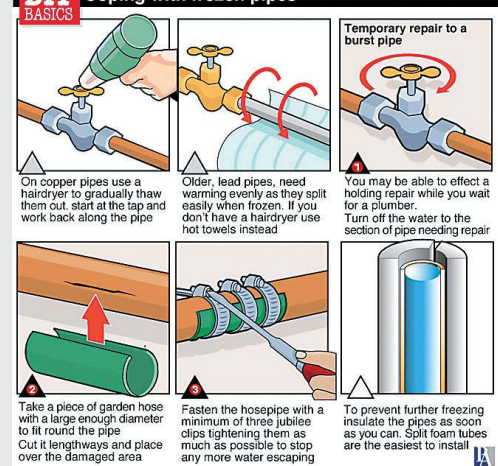

When pipes form a right angle, mitre the ends of the foam tubes that meet there. And when pipes form a T-junction, cut a wedge from the side of the straight foam tube to create room for the tapered end of the other tube.

This not only makes your home more eco, it should prevent problems occurring again, which you may or may not be able to solve yourself.

It's worth your while reconsidering your method of water treatment this summer.

Get ready for summer

Another summer season is almost here, time to uncover the swimming pool, and clean, repair and check the filtration system.

It's worth your while reconsidering your method of water treatment.

The use of chlorine manually applied actually works out to be the most expensive due to the ever increasing costs of all the chemicals. Added to this are all the health and environmental risks, the cancer risk, asthma in children, the damage to your garden and wildlife and even to the sewage treatment systems. The gas escaping when you open a can of chlorine can be highly dangerous. The damage to your plumbing, motors, valves and pool covers can cost a fortune, even worse if you have a liner or glass-fibre pool.

Look at the alternatives U.V. or Ultra-Violet radiation is unsuccessful because there is no residual effect so it has to be used in conjunction with chlorine or ionisers. The cost of maintenance and replacement lamps is high and so is energy consumption.

Salt-water systems are only automatic chlorine machines. All the same problems are present as in a manual chlorine pool but because in the higher summer temperatures the evaporation rate of chlorine is so high you will have to run your pumps for enormously extended periods to produce sufficient steriliser.

Thank goodness now we have copper-silver ionisers that automatically inject these two metals into your water, providing algae-free, bacteria-free water that you can drink.

No taste, no smell, no skin damage or any other side effects, your kids, animals and all will be free of risk and you can even use your backwash water on the garden. No risk to wildlife or the environment either.

Costs are initially lower and energy consumption is the lowest because of the residual properties of ions. Really there is no alternative to an ioniser, the only clean, safe and economic treatment on the market.

An alternative way to paint

Spray painting has never really caught on, neither have paint pads - the roller and paintbrush reign supreme.

In this country, spray painting has never really caught on, neither have paint pads - the roller and paintbrush reign supreme.

But this doesn't mean to say that spray painting should be dismissed out of hand - how do you know it's not for you unless you've given it a go?

While you do have to take the time and trouble to mask off everything in the room you don't want painted, spraying is a speedy and flawless way to paint any surface, particularly fiddly and intricate ones, such as louvre cupboard doors - you'll paint these in minutes rather than hours.

For big jobs like walls, there are a couple of different spray systems to consider.

The first is sprayers attached to air compressors. These atomise paint and project it onto a surface using the compressed air. You can vary the pressure, spray pattern and nozzle, enabling you to adapt to different surfaces and types of paint. You can also attach a power roller to an air compressor.

Power rollers enable you to work continuously with ease and dispense with the need for a messy roller tray.

The other type of sprayer is an airless one - these pump the paint at really high pressures to produce a more directed, denser coat of paint than compressed-air sprayers.

Airless sprayers are easier and quicker to use, but you need to use extreme care because the paint comes out at up to 200 miles an hour.

Use one carelessly and you could inject paint through your skin, which is extremely serious.

No paint job is worth that, so ensure you don't point the sprayer at anyone, including yourself, don't spray near pets and children and always unplug the sprayer when you're not using it and when you're unblocking the nozzle.

Also remember to wear goggles and a protective face mask, or if you're working with a toxic substance, such as lacquer, wear a respirator, which offers far better protection against fumes.

Before beginning to spray, you need to water down the paint, usually by at least 10 per cent.

Use a viscosity stick to see whether you've thinned the paint enough - the paint should drain from one point on the stick to another in a certain number of seconds to be the correct thickness.

Once the paint's the right consistency, strain it to remove anything that might clog up the sprayer - use cheesecloth or layers of tights to do this.

Another important part of preparation is masking off anything you don't want painted. The mist of paint can - and will - go everywhere, windows included, so don't be complacent or you'll have an almighty mess on your hands.

You should already, of course, have prepared the walls in the usual way. That means filling any holes and cracks with an appropriate filler, sanding, wiping clean and repeating if necessary.

Even if your walls are in good condition, you should sand any minor lumps and bumps, clean off any marks and wash the walls down.

Spray painting gives you a more flawless finish than painting with a brush or roller, which usually leave marks, so you want your walls to be as near perfect as possible to start with.

As always, preparation is key and plays a major part in determining how good the finished result will be.

QUICK FIX -short answers to tricky questions

Q: The previous owner of my home was told she couldn't have a combination boiler because of the pipes. I'm now living there and am keen to have a combi installed. I thought everyone could have one - am I right?

A: Unfortunately, not every home can accommodate a combi without all the pipes being replaced. Many older pipes can't take such a high-pressure system, so get a second opinion from a reputable plumber, but be prepared to be disappointed. Replacing the pipes is another option, but this will be very expensive and disruptive.

Go green with Novambiente

Novambiente Lda. was founded in 1989. They provide a professional service for Consulting, Planning and Installation of central heating systems and solar energy systems; hot water systems and pool heating.

In co-operation with their clients and their fully qualified engineer each system or solution is designed to meet the specific needs of their customers.

Their trained staff ensure the highest standards of product, installation and service.

There are some details to be clarified if you want to put in a house heating system:

Heat Demand: which depends on the building materials used (windows, insulation, construction of walls and roof).

Heat Distribution: a low temperature system needs large heating areas (e.g. under floor heating, wall heating). It is a slowly working system, which needs more time to heat up the room. But the heat loss is less. A system working with higher temperature needs smaller heating areas (e.g. radiators), but requires a higher temperature and entails higher heat loss. It is a quicker working system.

Way of Heat Production:

· Solar energy, gas heater, oil stove, wood burner, electrical energy (e.g. heat pump).

· Solar energy is suitable for a low temperature working system, but it needs always a back-up for days without sun.

· Gas boiler and oil-stove (fuel) can be used in either low or high temperature working systems.

· A wood burner (with back boiler) can be used in both systems but should be connected to a storage tank in case of an under floor heating.

· Electrical energy should be applied for heating only and be used together with a heat pump. Otherwise it would not be wise in terms of ecology and economy.

All heating systems can be installed in combination. But this cannot be explained in a brief description, because it depends on the client's requests and on the architectural house conditions.

Swimming pools, although fun for children, can also be a place of danger. For this reason, Pure Pools recommends 'BabySecur' fencing, acknowledged by specialists as one of the most user-friendly safety fences available.

Pure Pools, providing peace of mind

With summer on its way, the swimming pool is starting to look more and more inviting. But how safe is your pool? With numerous pool drownings taking place each year, pool safety is something to be taken very seriously. Make the most of your pool this summer, in the safest way possible.

Based in Lagos, Pure Pools are swimming pool specialists with over 15 years' experience. The company provides a service that is second to none, supplying pool safety products and equipment of the highest standard, as well as an efficient maintenance and pool repair service.

For the past few years, stressing the importance of pool safety has become one of the company's main concerns, and Pure Pools strives to keep abreast of the latest EU regulations.

Swimming pools, although fun for children, can also be a place of danger. Backyard pool drownings are quick and silent, and, tragically, take place all too frequently.

For this reason, Pure Pools recommends 'BabySecur' fencing, acknowledged by specialists as one of the most user-friendly safety fences available.

Once installed this easy-to-use fencing creates a see-through barrier and provides a long-term alternative to other standard pool safety products.

Hard-wearing, sturdy, and efficient all year-round, the fencing opens to the pool via a gate and safety latch that can only be operated by an adult. This means that whilst some family members swim, other smaller family members can remain safely out of water's way.

Established in 1992 by Peter Wolstenholme, Pure Pools was later joined by Peter's brother Stephen. Together they have applied their expertise in engineering and electronics to provide a more accurate and extensive service than ever before.

The company's Air Energy Heat Pumps are the best on the market, extremely economical and standard include a titanium heat exchanger (with a 10 year guarantee), digital control, phase protection relay, and an automatic defrost function.

Where pool hygiene is concerned, the benefits of salt chlorination are well documented. Pure Pools have been using the Clearwater Salt Chlorination Systems for the last ten years and recommend them as the most reliable.

Covers in all shapes, sizes, and materials, both automatic and manual, can be chosen from the company, as well as a large range of relaxing indoor and outdoor spas and hot tubs, which Pure Pools also install.

Low power consumption LED (Light Emitting Diode) lights are also available providing a reliable way to illuminate your pool.

Preparation key to painting success

Maybe, when vegging out on the sofa at the weekend, you notice a few problems here and there and want to know what went wrong. Many DIY disasters are the result of poor or no preparation, or not using high quality or the right tools and materials.

Preparation is essential to good DIY, which is a shame because it's boring and time consuming, but has to be done - and done well - nevertheless. Here are some common painting problems and how you can avoid them next time.

Flaking

Paint often flakes with age but if your paint isn't that old, there will be other causes. A common one is poor surface preparation - painting over things like dust, dirt and grease is a no-no. Surfaces should, almost always, be repaired, sanded and cleaned thoroughly.

If you live in a period property that hasn't been decorated for years and years, flaking paint may be caused by distemper (an old-fashioned glue or size-based paint). To test for distemper, wet the surface with water and wait to see if the paint peels away - distemper will. Get as much of it off as you can with water and a scraper, then seal the rest with a couple of coats of plaster sealer.

Seeing double

If you can see the paint you've painted over through the coats of paint you've recently applied, you probably used the wrong undercoat or no undercoat at all. Other causes include brushing the paint out too much, thinning the paint too much and not stirring the paint adequately, which is especially important with oil-based paints because they separate.

Dull gloss

If your gloss isn't glossy enough, paint that's too thin or has been over brushed may, again, be the cause. Alternatively, it may be that you haven't allowed the gloss to dry properly between coats - it usually takes many hours - or that you've painted in a room that's too cold, which will also slow down the drying process.

Similarly, hairline cracks can appear in emulsion if you've applied the paint too thickly or in moist conditions, for example if you're steaming off wallpaper nearby.

Runs and wrinkles

These also happen when the paint is applied too thickly and isn't brushed out properly. To solve the problem, leave the paint to dry for at least a week, then rub down with good quality sandpaper and start again. The same applies if your paint is blistering, the cause of which is probably you painting a wet surface or onto paint that's soft, old or peeling.

Specks in paint

These are usually caused by dust and debris getting into the paint can, onto the brush, roller or paint pad and onto the surface you're painting, so ensure you clean everything thoroughly before you start. Contaminated paint is particularly a problem if you're painting outside because the wind whips up all sorts of debris. Get round this by putting a small amount of paint into a paint kettle and working from that, so all the paint isn't ruined if the kettle becomes contaminated.

If you're painting skirting boards, it's easy to pick up dust and debris from the floor below, so clean the floor thoroughly and then cover the edges with masking tape or a paint guard. Also, regularly check your brush, roller or paint pad for specks (and wipe clean as and when necessary), make sure your paint can lid isn't dirty when you replace it, because it can easily pick up dust if left lying around, and don't wear clothes that deposit lots of fluff near drying or wet paint. If there's debris in your paint can, try scooping it out with a piece of stiff cardboard or plastic.

Yellowing

Yellow stains occur when you've painted over bare wood but haven't sealed the knots, allowing the resin in them to bleed through. Knot sealing is really quick and easy to do and shouldn't be overlooked. If you have, you need to strip off all the paint and start again. Yellowing can also happen on radiators painted white - always use special heat-resistant radiator paint - and with some clear varnishes - look out for ones that say they're non-yellowing.

Like most DIY, painting can be a bit of a minefield but it basically boils down to a few simple rules and a lot of common sense.

Chic shacks

Once the sole preserve of men and their tools, sheds are becoming a hip urban retreat from family life. We discover how to make your shed a chic shack.

That 'out of sight, out of mind' storage space for garden gear is increasingly being put to imaginative and versatile uses, from extra living space to work-shops and home offices.

It's a trend that's becoming so popular that celebrities, including Zoe Ball and TV interior designers Colin McAllister and Justin Ryan, created 'designer sheds', at the Ideal Home Show.

Zoe proved sheds have stopped being solely a male preserve with her pink-painted Girly Garden retreat.

"I went for a cosy look, but with lushness too, all whites and soft dusky pinks, mirrored side tables and beautiful pale pink silk curtains with embroidered cream flowers," she says.

"It's feminine, nostalgic and evokes the era of my favourite films - Casablanca and Rebecca - with my original film posters on the walls."

Colin and Justin celebrated their Scottish roots with a contemporary spin on a hunting lodge theme. They used tartans, tweeds and skins as well as chairs and a chandelier made from antlers.

"Think more 21st century Braveheart than shortbread tin or white heather club!" says Colin.

TV chef James Martin turned his into a mini kitchen, and DJ Neil Fox devoted his shed to a pampering repair room for his pride and joy - his Harley Davidson motorbike.

So take another look at that dingy, cobwebby, dark cavern filled with old bicycles and a lawnmower.

With a bit of tender loving care, and minimal expense, that shed could easily be turned into a garden sanctuary.

SHED FACTS

- A well-kept shed can add up to 5% to the value of a property.
- The Zoological Museum, now part of London's Natural History Museum, was begun by Walter Rothschild at the age of seven in a garden shed.

Wallace & Gromit's adventures, The Wrong Trousers, A Close Shave and Curse Of the Were-Rabbit, were written by Bob Baker in his garden shed in Oldbury-on-Seven, Gloucestershire.

Shed lovers can visit a dedicated website, www.readersheds.co.uk, where you can post a picture of your shed, or join a chatroom for other sheddists.

SHED STYLE

Don't worry about perfection in your shed - after all this is somewhere you want to chill and relax and not worry about cleaning and tidying.

So keep it simple, use easy-wash, cotton-print fabrics for curtains and throws, a second-hand chair (who cares if it's losing its stuffing!) and a fold-up wooden garden table.

Accessorise with prints or posters or maybe some colourful flag bunting.

Hang up a clock so you know what time to make tea, add a few cushions and hey presto - you've got a sanctuary.

'CABBAGES AND ROSES'

Love faded vintage fabrics and goodies like china and enamel ware harking back to yesteryear? Company 'Cabbages and Roses' is a treasure trove full of goodies for jazzing up the shed.

GO EAST

A Japanese-inspired shed is one of the suggestions in a new book, 101 Ways To Make More Space [BBC Books].

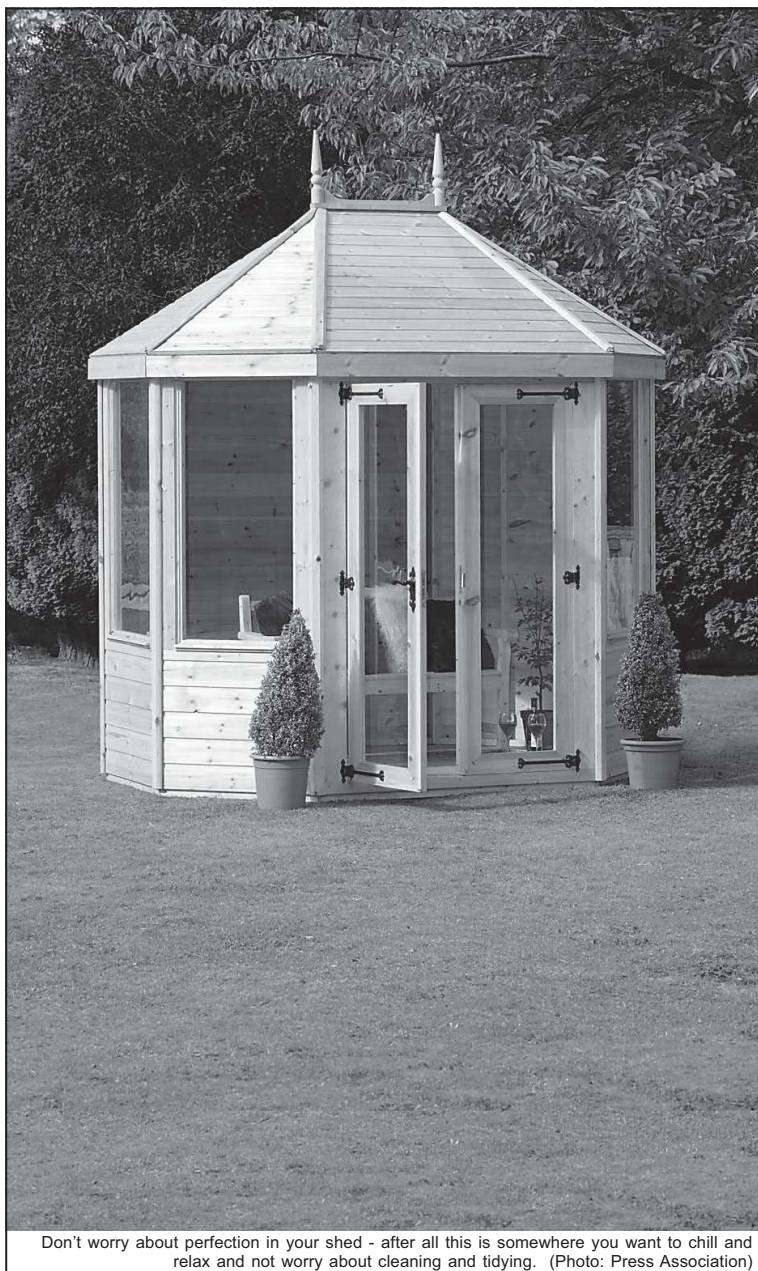

Author Julie Savill says: "Put a simple shed in a quiet corner of the garden and turn it into a tranquil summer house and it could be the ideal place to escape and chill out."

Simply disguise the ugly felt roof of the shed with bamboo screening, available on long rolls from garden centres.

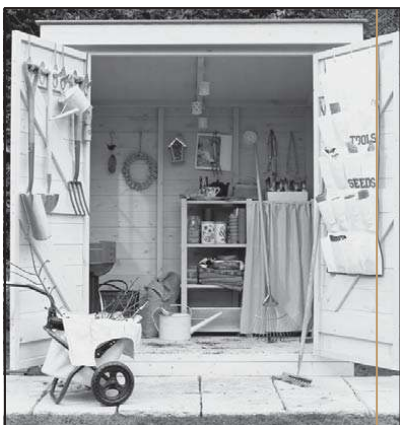

Add a trellis of thick bamboo canes up the side and another of thinner canes across the window.

Inside have a bench, incense burner and some Eastern style cushions, and conjure the mood with a sweet scented jasmine and a bamboo plant nearby.

QUICK FIX - short answers to tricky questions

Q: I've just moved in with my friend and we seem to have different ideas about decorating. We've got woodchip wallpaper in a couple of the rooms and she just wants to paint it for now so it's nice for when family visit us, but I don't think that will improve the look of it very much. Who's right?

A: The problem with woodchip, of course, is the unsightly texture. It's great for covering up uneven walls but won't win any prizes for aesthetics - and painting it isn't going to change that.

Also, painting walls takes more time than you think, plus paint isn't cheap, so it's a waste of time and money not to do the job properly - and you'll only want to redo it.

Because you don't know what state the walls are in underneath and because woodchip can be hard to get off, wait until you have more time and can do everything by the book - the results will look so much better.

In the UK...

Q: I have original Victorian coving in my living room but no decorative ceiling rose. To be authentic, should I fit one?

A: Not all rooms in Victorian homes had ceiling roses, but if you've got the coving, there was probably a rose there at one time.

To fit a replacement rose easily and safely, choose a hard resin or polyurethane one because plaster roses are heavy and so dangerous if not fitted to professional standards.

If you want the real deal, solid or fibrous plaster roses can often be fitted by the company you buy them from - try the internet.

You should be able to get a rose that matches the type of coving you have, be it an elaborate pattern or a simple series of parallel lines.

Get rid of your unwanted guests

Now in its fourth generation, the Electro Gun is an innovative, technically intricate, hand-held electronic system that combines high frequency and high voltage to overcome wood's natural resistance to electrical current flow. Utilizing four US patented designs, this system allows electrical current to penetrate wood and flow into galleries and nests of dry wood termites, killing them by electric shock.

The Electro-Gun System is not to be confused with any of those electronic 'plug-in' devices you may have seen on TV or in magazine ads that supposedly rid your house of all insect pests. This system has studies confirming that it does work.

The studies

In the infancy of the Electro-Gun's development and design, extensive research and tests were conducted by one of the nation's leading entomologists Dr Walter Ebling, Professor Emeritus, University of California and author of 'Urban Entomology'. More recently, research and testing was conducted at the University of California, Berkeley, by one of the nation's foremost experts on dry wood termites, Dr Vernard Lewis.

In Dr Lewis' research and study, a mock structure was conducted to simulate the conditions found in a typical home. Naturally-infested as well as artificially-infested wood was placed in different areas of the attic, interior and sub-floor. His tests proved that when used according to the manufacturer's instruction and guidelines, the Electro-Gun was 98% effective in killing all the dry wood termites in the structure.

Toxic products

It is a fact that the public has growing concerns of toxic products in their home. The Electro-Gun has no toxins, unlike fumigation. After all, ridding your home of dry wood termites should be a life and death issue only for the termites, not the homeowners or the environment. For over 28 years, the Electro-Gun has been used to successfully treat and kill dry wood termites in thousands of homes as well as nursing homes, hospitals, hotels, condominiums, apartments and even historical landmarks.

For more information on how to get rid of those nasty termites, call Action Complete Pest Control in Moncarapacho on 289 793 644 or 968 484 383.

Pick of the Day

Neneh and Andi - Dishing It Up (BBC2, 8pm)

Buffalo Stance singer Neneh Cherry joins forces with her best pal, Andi Oliver, for this new show about food. The friends kick-start the series with this episode called Midnight Margaritas, which was named after a memorable scene in Practical Magic, one of their favourite films. Aside from featuring lashings of the tequila-based beverage, the instalment has an Asian theme as the girls pop to a huge Oriental supermarket on the outskirts of London. Once they've got their ingredients, the duo rustle up a crispy duck salad and a prawn and squid dish. Scenting the rice they serve with orange, lime and cardamom, they also fry baby fennel, Chinese broccoli and wild asparagus, so vegetarians out there need not worry that the programme will leave their tastes out. Enjoying their hard work will be 12 of their closest friends who are travelling from across Europe to take part in the feast. Rather than serving their guests with dessert, the hostesses have something else in mind - but what does it have to do with a lingerie shop? You'll have to tune in to find out.

Pick of the Day

The Mark of Cain (C4, 9pm)

At a particularly poignant time, following the recent four-year anniversary of the commencement of the ongoing war, this moving drama from Bafta-award winning writer Tony Marchant hits all the right spots as it portrays a group of young British soldiers stationed in the country. It depicts two young privates posted to Basra in 2003, 18-year-old Shane Gulliver (Mathew McNulty) and Mark 'Treacle' Tate (Gerard Kearns), who are keen to prove they're out there to make a difference. However, their rules of engagement as peace-keeping troops confront them with complex situations as the pair are forced to make life-threatening decisions in an environment more brutal than any training could ever have prepared them for. As they experience the reality of war and the intricate moral dilemmas of soldiering for the first time, the two return to England not with the heroic stories they had hoped for, but instead armed with uncomfortable and disturbing memories. As they try to adapt to life back in Blighty, they are faced with betrayal in their own camp and the events that result as a consequence ensure their lives are changed forever.

Pick of the Day

My Family (BBC1, 8.30pm)

There are more than a few surprises in store for the Harpers as this brilliant comedy returns to our screens for a new series. Ben and Susan are astonished when a mystery man arrives at their house asking for Janey and are even more shocked to discover the newcomer is none other than the father of their grandson - an individual they had begun to think they'd never meet. However, Mark's appearance creates an unhappy situation for the young mum, but she eventually decides to grant him access to Kenzo. Unfortunately it's a decision she regrets instantly when he fails to bring her offspring back on time. Her concern at his sudden involvement in her child's life heightens when it becomes apparent he has been married for two years and her little boy has already been introduced to his 'new mummy'. While Janey tries to cope with her complicated personal life, her parents have to deal with further revelations at a dinner party with the Mortons. The couple are informed their friends are having trouble conceiving and Susan is left stunned when they make an unexpected request for some of her husband's sperm. Ben, on the other hand, is thrilled by what he views as a huge compliment to his fertility, until his mood is dampened after a very unsatisfactory trip to the clinic.

IMMEDIACY!

What could it do for your business?

An advert in the TV guide is a very powerful tool. It will be read by thousands of potential clients with high spending power. How can we be so sure? Have you seen the price of a reasonable satellite system to receive the above programmes? These are people you want to talk to, to tell them what you have to offer. But these are special adverts, they have high exposure for one day. Use them properly for really powerful results... A special offer for the next day, a discount if you eat at your restaurant that evening, an event that follows within a day or two.

Bowling news

The inter club bowls competition finals were held at the Clube de Bowling at Parque da Floresta on Saturday 24th March which brought to a conclusion a well-contested and friendly session of matches held over the last few months.

The final of the singles between Brian Gill and Max Hodges was hotly contested for in the early stages with Brian pulling clear to win in the latter stages of the game.

The pair's final was contested between Ed Keighley and Jack Brammer against Ken Catherall and Ron Nutter. Ken and Ron proved to be too powerful opponents with the win going in their favour. The triples final was played in an exciting atmosphere between Cath and George Wood and Max Hodges against John Woodworth, Ken Catherall, and Ed Keighley. This game was hotly contested with Ed's team gaining victory.

The Two wood final was played out in good spirit between Bev Forshaw and George Wood with George winning on the day.

Now in its second year the Ladies Championship singles was contested by Jan Collins and Josie Bell with Jan Collins winning. Both parties played this game at an earlier venue due to UK commitments.

Janice Clarke presented some very handsome club trophies to the victors together with some fine engraved individual trophies for all finalists. Janice congratulated all the winners and commiserated with the losing finalists, praising all who participated for their sportsmanship and spirit in which the competition was held. All members agreed that this year was an exceptional year for all who participated in the bowling at the club.

Members look forward to renewing the competition for next season.

South American Wine Evening

On Friday evening, 23rd March, an enthusiastic group of 72 Wine Society members gathered together for an informative, yet fun, evening of tasting some fine wines from Chile and Argentina.

The venue was the Garbe Hotel, Armação de Pêra, and following an introduction of Brian Ford, our expert for the tastings, by Erla Walther, President of the Society, Brian explained the importance of these two countries on the world stage of wine production. Whilst they have always made wines, it is only relatively recently that everyone is sitting up and taking notice of the high quality and consistency of the wines coming out of Chile and Argentina. Members were shown maps of the wine regions, and we were given some interesting facts such as Chile is 3,000 miles long, yet only 100 miles wide, but with the Andes running the whole length of the wine growing areas, the vines are both protected from severe weather conditions and disease and irrigated at the same time. In fact the most perfect climate in the world for viticulture. Mendoza in Argentina, the other side of the mountains, whilst in a higher altitude, enjoys similar excellent growing conditions.

Then it was down to the serious business of tasting. Three whites and four reds were offered from the vineyards of Vina Casa Silva in the Rapel Valley in Chile and Finca Flichman – now an associate of Sogrape, Portugal – from Argentina. Taste buds were challenged and titillated by first a peachy oaked Chardonnay, to a lighter very drinkable apricot, mango tasting Chardonnay/Semillon, a beautiful zingy, lemony Sauvignon Gris (a new grape discovered only 10 years ago in Chile), and then onto the reds – an Argentinian Syrah with its gorgeous liquorice, spicy flavour, a Carmenere Reserva, unique to Chile, an inky dark wine full of dried fruit aromas (and at 14% our most alcoholic wine of the evening), finishing with velvety smooth Malbec – a great favourite – to a Cab Sauv/Carmenere full of dark berry fruits and violet aromas. Brian gave members the expected retail prices to pay and where to shop, with WineMine being the source of many of these wines.

A four course dinner followed in the hotel's Restaurant featuring roast lamb and some fine cheeses, and two further wines were served with the meal, a creamy white Viognier from Argentina and a delicious Cabernet Sauvignon from Chile. Conversation flowed along with the wine, a raffle was held, and many happy wine lovers retired to bed, replete with good food and wine and happy with the knowledge that tonight they had discovered a fascinating new corner of the wonderful world of wine.

If you are interested in purchasing any of the wines mentioned, call WineMine on 282 441 036 or e-mail them: mail@winemine.net

English church services in Caldas da Rainha

Anglican church services have been taking place in Caldas da Rainha. The services are generally conducted by The Rev. Michael Bullock, the Chaplain of Greater Lisbon, now assisted by Verna Veritie, who was appointed to be a Reader last year. Hence they are associated with the Lisbon Chaplaincy, of which Caldas is now an outpost.

The form of the services is usually very similar to Evensong. They take place at 6:00pm on the first Sunday evening of each month. Although the numbers in the congregation started small, they are beginning to increase.

The church buildings in which the services take place belong to the Evangelical Baptist Church of Caldas, located in a narrow street between the railway station and the town centre.

Coincidentally, the pastor of the Baptist church is also an Englishman, Alan Pallister. He heads a team which leads Baptist worship in Portuguese on Sunday mornings and at other times.

Oasis of hope for Madeira's strays

They have known only neglect or abuse in their young lives. Now in the safety of the Funchal headquarters of SPAD (Sociedade Protectora dos Animais Domésticos), the unwanted strays of Madeira wait patiently yet eagerly for one last chance of a new life.

In all colours and sizes (smaller animals are easier to re-home because of the shortage of private gardens on Madeira) the abandoned dogs wriggle in delight as they greet their human visitors. Most are beautiful to look at, but more importantly, almost all are friendly and trusting. None seems to harbour ill-will towards humans – the very species, which caused them so much suffering before they found temporary sanctuary here.

The sad truth is that not all these lovely animals will enjoy a happy future with caring owners. Of the 3,500 stray cats and dogs taken in by SPAD each year, fewer than half find new homes. The lucky ones go to local families or start new lives abroad – perhaps in Germany, Scandinavia or the Netherlands, where Madeiran strays are particularly valued for their happy, affectionate dispositions. Relatively few will go to the United Kingdom, because would-be British adopters tend to lack the necessary commitment and determination to navigate the “red tape” which still exists there. SPAD is the third oldest animal protection organisation in Portugal, having been founded in 1897. It is a private institution associated with the RSPCA and also a public utility service whose main objective is the direct protection of animals (in particular, abandoned ones).

There is accommodation for 150 strays in the municipal kennel at Sítio do Vasco Gil, which is under SPAD's management by arrangement with the Municipality of Funchal. Of the 11 municipalities on Madeira, only Funchal has its own kennel, a deficiency which SPAD is seeking to change. Suzette Steyn has been the Administrator of SPAD for 10 years.

Originally from South Africa, she has lived on Madeira for 18 years.

Explaining the work of the Society, she says: “Here at SPAD, we are opposed to the euthanasia of healthy animals. Our budget is limited and, in certain circumstances, such as incurable/contagious disease or accidents, euthanasia might be necessary. Furthermore, we try not to keep any animal caged for more than one year”.

Suzette continues: “There is cruelty to animals on the Island. In rural areas, in particular, there is an uncaring attitude. Animals are not normally kept as pets by country people. Poisoning is a major problem here and even when cases of animal abuse go to court, the fines are very low – Euros 250 was the largest penalty imposed so far.”

Suzette has this advice for owners of animals which fall victim to poison. “Give them a drink of strong, salty water. If they can't be saved, bring the bodies to SPAD so that post mortem examinations can be carried out to ascertain the source of the poison”.

As Suzette speaks, a small white poodle sits contentedly on her lap. The rapport between the two is obvious. The dog is one of five personally adopted by Suzette from among the strays taken in by SPAD. Describing the education programmes which SPAD runs in schools, Suzette says:

“The present generation of Madeirans is lost to us – people of our age will never change their attitude towards animals. The future lies with the youngsters. We hold four-day courses in animal welfare for children aged between 12 and 17. First they learn the theory and then they come here to gain practical experience of working with animals.”

SPAD operates a veterinary clinic, a cattery, lodging and grooming facilities, all the proceeds of which go to the care of abandoned dogs and cats. Another important aspect of the Society's work is its sterilisation programme. Suzette explains: “We

Water Trials starting again

Calling all Portuguese Waterdogs and brave, fit owners for fun and games.

I have now received notification of the first of this seasons Water Trials. Sunday 22nd April in Portimão. The Beauty Contest is at Praça Manuel Teixeira Gomes, starting a 10am. However, by experience they never do start at 10am, usually nearer 11am!! Last year this was down at the River's Edge in Portimão, presumably this will be the same. Just look for a ring and some people with Waterdogs, they really are usually very easy to find!!! After the beauty contest they move down to an area near the Marina, a short car drive away. Again just look for water Dogs and people in wet suits. Last year it was unbelievably cold at this event and we sat and shivered in our fleeces!!

You may remember from last year what is entailed in the Water Trials, but a quick recap. The First Test is to cover the swimming ability, this involves your dog following you (yes I am afraid we people have to get wet!!) as you swim around the previously placed buoys. As the dogs improve and move up the classes that swim is increased to a specific timed swim. Izzy, Laura's Water Dog has moved up a group as of April and Laura and Izzy will have to do a two minute swim!

They are judged on: How the dog enters the water, speed obtained, this will be clocked and recorded, the style of swimming. The Second Test is the retrieve. The dog is sat beside you, object (provided by the Judge) is thrown, the dog must swim out, retrieve and return to you, sitting on your left hand side. They are judged on: How the dog observes the throw and 'remembers' its location, how the dog retrieves, which should be fast and decisive, and how the dog brings back the object and how fast. The Third Test is the dive. This can be the real challenge. You stand in the water, throw a weighted object, the dog must dive to get it, and the head must go right under the water.

They are judged on: How the dog observes the object submerging, the capacity to hold it's breathe when diving and how the dog dives, depth reached and finding the object under water.

To achieve all this does include a fair amount of training, we found last year that sometimes Izzy and Cleo would be focused and train well, whilst other times they had the concentration of a small child, it was no use trying to force them but we had to work with them. I am in a quandary this year, Laura now has several water dogs to train and run in the Water Trials, there is no way she can 'swim' my two. This means mine cannot take part in the Water Trials as I am not fit enough to do the swim. If anyone out there in Water Dog world wants to train their dog with mine and could face the swim with mine, please contact me on 916 273 376.

For further details on the training involved for Water Trials please contact Laura on 919 551 614, she is far better qualified in the finer details of these trials and she helped us so much last year.

Seeing our Waterdogs doing the Water Trials is fantastic, it is what they were bred to do, they were not bred to be show dogs, but to work with the fishermen and the boats—hence Cleo's habit of retrieving boats for me, it just comes naturally. Remember that the Portuguese Water Dog is allowed on the beach all year as it is a Fisherman's working dog. Must remind Cleo and Merlin of that!

have a clinic where neutering is carried out – it is free for owners who cannot pay or by instalments for those who have difficulty in paying. Also, from 1st to 10th April this year, we have arranged with a group of four women called the Spay Sisters for them to carry out free sterilisations of animals on Madeira.”

Suzette believes that in the last decade, the situation for animals on the Island has improved. “People are doing something to make it better but of course it is not enough – it never will be enough. We ourselves require so much more support. We have 4,000 members but not all are fully paid-up. We need more volunteers, more donations and more people to adopt the abandoned animals. With more help, we can save even greater numbers. We also need people to sponsor an animal – after shelter and food, the greatest need of our strays' is for attention. Even our dedicated staff cannot cope alone with grooming, walking or playing with all the animals on a regular basis – in other words there is too little time to give them the individual attention that they need.”

Important Announcement

It has been brought to our attention that a large quantity of moist food has been recalled across the globe. The food was manufactured in Canada by Menu Foods. There is a list of all recalled foods at <http://www.snopes.com/critters/crusader/menu.asp>. Some of these brands are on sale in Portugal – Royal Canin, Eukanuba, Nutro, Iams but it is only the moist, canned and pouched foods that seem to have been affected. Please check the above site and associated lists for all the information.

A precautionary tale

Last year was a bad year for ticks and tick fever. Several friends lost much loved dogs through tick fever, in most cases by the time it became obvious the dog was so ill it really was past the point of no return. Tick Fever IS treatable and successfully so, if caught early enough. It involves a long course of specific antibiotics but our dogs can and do recover. Even my Lennie, with his compromised immune system, had, and recovered from, Tick Fever in 2004.

Already this year we have found ticks on our fully treated dogs, yes they did remove easily but it proves that they are out there early this year. I was told it was because we have had a dry and warm winter. Now I honestly thought it was cold, obviously not cold enough for the ticks. All four of my dogs are protected by natural products, in the shape of daily Dorwest Garlic and Fenugreek tablets and alternatively the Dynamite and Dorwest Pennyroyal Shampoo, both are herbal, Hypoallergenic and insect repellents. I also have them protected, against all my principles, by Advantix for 3 of the dogs, and frontline and stronghold for Chloe after her allergic reaction to Advantix last year. The battle against the three worst illnesses has persuaded me to cover them even though I hate the idea of putting chemicals into them.

My other measure is six monthly blood tests, yes, extreme some people may feel. I will have them blood tested for leishmania, and tick fever. Also as instructed by all instructions on the Heartguard I will keep them tested for heartworm before I give them the Heartguard. Yes this involve trailing in my case four dogs to the Vets for blood tests, one drawing of blood will cover all - BUT - if it means I know and can treat them for any of these illnesses it will be worth the inconvenience and the cost of the blood tests. They are not complicated tests and therefore not horrendously expensive, all pricing is different so please check with your Vet. Half of me is frightened to know, but the other half knows that at least if I know I can get them treated fast. Living in the sun has many advantages but living with the threat of these illnesses is a worry. In the UK we had various things to avoid, but down here the list seems endless at times. So, every time you get back from a walk it is best to check all for unwanted visitors. Take it from me doing this on my two BLACK Water Dogs is very difficult, easier on the OES as they are predominately white. Another useful recommendation, (thank you Rachel) is to cut back the long fur on the dogs feet, us with furry footed dogs that is, they look a bit silly, but it gives the ticks more of a challenge and is useful in the grass seed fight! Not sure how I will get away with that on the PWDs in showcoat. My Chloe the Old English Sheepdog was 'attacked' by a grass seed in April 2004. She had exploratory surgery when it was impossible to find it, it finally re-appeared in August 2004, at the same spot it had gone in, very odd. Grass seeds, however, were a problem in the UK as well, my first OES had one in his paw that re-appeared at the top of his leg months later.

If any of the above helps someone out there in doggy land it will all be worthwhile. I am no vet so please check out the blood tests, diseases, preventative treatment and treatment of all with your Vet. Good luck with the blood tests, the thought of keeping my two Waterdogs still enough for blood tests doesn't even bear thinking about! Perhaps after having these blood tests every six months they will accept it as part of life, bit like the show haircut!

Chocoholics Anonymous

Many of us may boast of being chocoholics at Easter time, but chocolate contains a variety of addictive substances. We ask the experts if it's possible to get hooked: how much chocolate is too much?

Chocolate fans won't be surprised to know it's the easiest and most popular solution to life's stresses and strains - from being dumped to feeling hormonal. It's naughty but nice and yet despite the calories and advice from our dentists, 11 million people in the UK eat it daily. And as we head to the biggest chocolate fest of the year - Easter - the temptations will be particularly difficult if we are 'chocoholics' and can't resist the stuff.

Like other sweet food, chocolate is thought to stimulate the release of endorphins: natural body hormones that generate feelings of pleasure and well-being.

Jacqui Lowdon, spokesperson for the British Dietetic Association, explains: "Chocolate is the most commonly craved food because it melts at body temperature and has that instant feel good factor."

Bio-psychologist Dr Leigh Gibson adds: "From a sensory point of view, it's quite a unique experience. The combination of creamy, fatty sensations and sweetness makes it a memorable taste that people want to return to."

Experts are still uncertain why people crave it so much even though it does contain 300 chemicals, including some ingredients such as caffeine that are mildly stimulating.

But how much is too much? If you are spending so much on chocolate you think it should be on prescription and your weight's soaring it could be time to think about help.

Hypnotherapist Ursula James is one expert who helps people overcome their chocolate 'addiction'. She says: "I've helped people who eat up to 12 bars a day, which can cause them serious health problems and emotional problems because it makes them feel out of control and damages their self-esteem."

"Just because it is a food problem the seriousness of it can be dismissed, which is wrong. There are people who secretly binge on chocolate, and pay cash for chocolate supplies so they don't appear on the family shopping bill."

Key to a solution, she says, is identifying the mood that triggers their need for chocolate and finding a way to alter the pattern of behaviour so the need for chocolate is eliminated.

BioActivo Quinona Q10 contains coenzyme Q10 which is your body's natural energy booster

Age tends to limit our physical boundaries but it doesn't have to be like that. If you lack the vitamin-like substance, coenzyme Q10, it lowers your energy production. Both the ageing process and certain diseases are known to reduce the body's coenzyme Q10 levels, but with BioActivo Quinona Q10 you can prevent a deficiency – and perhaps regain some of energy you lost along the way.

BioActivo Quinona Q10 – Europe's first Q10 preparation

In 1991, Pharma Nord introduced the first European coenzyme Q10 preparation (BioActivo Quinona Q10). The product remains a market leader today because of its unique blend of vegetable oil and coenzyme Q10 in soft, light-resistant gelatine capsules. This is the formula that has been shown to provide the highest level of bio-availability.

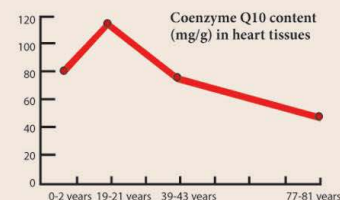

unique mixture of vegetable oil and coenzyme Q10 soft light-resistant gelatine capsules

Am I getting enough Q10 from my diet?

We get a certain amount of coenzyme Q10 from our diet (normally between 5-20 mg). Fish, eggs, beef and pork are particularly rich sources. In addition, the human liver is able to synthesise coenzyme Q10. Unfortunately, this ability is reduced with age and as a result of disease. The body's natural synthesis of coenzyme Q10 peaks around the age of 20-25 years.

(Source: Lipids vol. 24, no. 7 (1989))

Coenzyme levels in a person's vital organs peak at the age of 19-21, suggesting that this is the time of life where you have the most energy.

:: We're a nation of choccie lovers. The average Briton eats approximately 9kg of chocolate a year - that's about three bars a week.

:: You're more likely to be female, as chocolate cravings are found in twice as many women as men. A Canadian study found 39% of women craved chocolate, compared to 14% of men.

:: Check your consumption. Self-confessed chocolate addicts studied in Dundee revealed that the average number of bars consumed by each in a week was 12 1/2, although one addict admitted consuming 70.

:: If you regularly eat more than one chocolate bar daily, hide your habit from friends and relatives, and don't like admitting to yourself how much chocolate you eat, you may be on your way to becoming a chocoholic.

CHOCOLATE TO GO!

Choose one of these six strategies for beating those chocolate cravings:

:: Have a banana: Chocolate lovers might scoff, but dietician Jacqui Lowdon says, "People often crave chocolate when they're tired and haven't eaten for a long period. That's because their blood sugar drops and they crave a quick hit of sugar which chocolate gives."

"A banana is a good substitute as it has a comforting, soft texture and sweet taste but releases the sugar more slowly with a longer lasting effect on energy levels." Another alternative is dried fruit or wholemeal bread.

The pay-off could be a trimmer waistline. To lose 1-2lbs a week you need to reduce your calorie intake on average by about 500 a day. One chocolate bar contains up to 300 calories so even scoffing one a day could seriously damage the chances of a new slim you.

:: After-dinner treat: Only eating chocolate when you already feel full after a meal has been found in research to reduce the craving.

Dr Leigh Gibson, bio-psychologist at Roehampton University, says: "It's about trying to relearn a habit, so instead of eating chocolate when you want it, avoid that and eat it when you don't. A study found that volunteers who limited themselves to a small amount of chocolate around 20 to 30 minutes after a meal managed to wean themselves off their habit."

:: Do your homework: Taking a 12-week course to beat the craving may sound like hard work but one offers "sweeteners" - a pressie each week to encourage you to stay on track and will-power boosting emails.

Beyond Chocolate is an online virtual workshop (sephoto right), and users receive two emails weekly as well as a pink parcel. The latter contains items such as a diary where you note how you feel when you tuck into something sweet, or a sand timer so you wait one minute before ripping open that wrapper.

It can be helpful in identifying a pattern in your cravings and boosting self-discipline. A course costs £150/€222, their website address is:

www.beyondchocolate.co.uk
:: Come clean: Don't pretend you don't want chocolate when you're feeling stressed or in need of comfort. But do avoid milk chocolate and instead opt for quality dark chocolate. It's richer, meaning you'll probably eat less, and it contains gentler, more protective flavonoids, mood-altering phenylethylamine and relaxing magnesium.

:: Start swotting: Understanding why chocolate has a hold on you could help you beat the habit, and Neal Barnard exposes its power over us in his book Breaking The Food Seduction, Published by St Martin's Griffin, price £7.84/€11.59.

He describes chocolate as "an addicting drug, targeting the same spot in your brain as opiate drugs" and points out it contains caffeine, theobromine, phenylethylamine and anandamide.

There's a suggested healthy alternative to sweet desserts: Neal Barnard's Instant Chocolate Pudding. Blend 340g firm, silken (soft) tofu, crumbled, 60ml to 120ml pure maple syrup, 70g cocoa or carob powder, two teaspoons vanilla extract and a pinch of salt. Chill before serving.

:: Change your mind: Making you feel sick when you think of chocolate is part of the hypnotherapy method used by Ursula James. She says: "It is aversion therapy. You think about the most revolting thing you've ever eaten and then through the therapy associate that with chocolate."

"The aim during the session is to stimulate the gagging response at the thought of chocolate, which results in the love of chocolate and craving for it being neutralised by the disgust."

A single session, including a CD to listen to for the following three weeks, is £180/€266. Call: 020 7262 1659 or go online to: www.ursulajames.com

Metallic magic

Shimmer and shine is big for the spring/summer season. We find the best metallic magic on the high street.

Clothes that shimmer and shine are usually reserved for party season glamour in the depths of winter. But this year metallics are a must-have for the sunny summer months too. Be prepared to glisten in gold and sparkle in silver: metallic fever is taking the fashion world by storm.

"As seen on the catwalk and high street, metallics are a strong trend for the summer," says Emily Fleuriot, editor at Fashion Monitor.

"They look great with a tan and can add a harder edge to an otherwise girly summer frock. Metallics is a great trend to buy into."

Metal-phobics take note: this is a versatile trend, whether you want to go space age in lavish silver, or prefer a luxurious look in precious metals like bronze and gold. For fresh summer style, less intrepid fashionistas can always wear their shimmer pared down with something more standard like a crisp white shirt.

So get your glitz on. There's no excuse not to shine this season.

Shades to be seen In

Burberry showcased crystal-studded frocks and Dolce & Gabbana sent shiny candy-wrapper corset dresses down the spring/summer catwalks. Some may recoil at the very thought of shiny fabrics and futuristic metalwear, but metallics can flatter anyone if you choose the right shade for you. Picking out a muted metallic like gunmetal - not a toffee-wrapper gold or tinfoil silver - makes the trend more wearable.

"There are variations on the metallic theme," Emily says. "Think brown, pewter and rose gold as well as the standard yellow gold and silver."

"In my opinion, there's no rules when it comes to metallics. The best bet is to look at a colour which adds radiance to your skin tone and/or wardrobe."

If you're looking to blend into the background, opt for pewter or steel shades like

Metallic mania

There are always those who want to embrace a trend at full speed. If you're loving the magic properties of metallic, go top-to-toe with a dress or jacket that will brighten even a black aficionado's look.

"Let's face it, it's a small minority of women who are going to look great in a silver catsuit, but there are ways to wear metallics which aren't going to hurt," Emily reassures.

"The younger among us can get away with metallic leggings (just) and a shimmer finish inarguably adds to the specialness of a party dress."

Silver flash

Still feeling scared about silver and gold? The most accessible way to work the metallic look is with on-trend accessories.

"I would be looking for statement bags and wedge sandals - accessories to add an element of metallic rather than too much," Emily advises.

"If you want to play it safe check out the plethora of shoes and bags available on the high street. A flash of silver adds a bit of glamour to everyday fashions."

Flower power

The daffodils are popping up, the days are staying brighter for longer and we're no longer confined to wearing heavy winter coats. It's official - spring is definitely on its way.

Flowers play a big part in beauty this spring, with the arrival of new floral scented fragrances, floral embossed palettes and oils from your favourite blooms being used in skincare.

The benefits of flowers are well known, especially in aromatherapy. A recent Harvard study also shows that receiving flowers can make women happy and boost their energy levels.

The fashion and beauty worlds go hand in hand, and both are embracing flowers this season.

Coming up roses

Harnessing the power of flowers isn't new in skincare, but it is becoming more common. The humble rose, with its astringent and relaxing properties, is the most popular flower.

Exotically speaking

If you're desperately in need of some sun and good weather, these tropical treats should cheer you up a bit.

Florally fresh

Ensure winter is well and truly over with a spritz of flowers that will instantly brighten up gloomy days. With the numerous fragrance launches in April, there's something for everyone.

Prefer a scent that no one else can distinguish? Pick something more unique made with rare flowers.

Exquisite perfumes include YvesSaintLaurent Opium Orchidee De Chine, made with Chinese orchid, the royal symbol of the Empress of China, and Caudalie Fleur De Vigne, made with rare vine flower. This flower blossoms for only one day, so it's little surprise that the fragrance took seven years to be created.

Rule Virginia

While the masses of foreign tourists flock to Florida, only those Americans in the know head to Virginia, making the area one of the nation's best kept secrets.

In 1607 more than 100 intrepid travellers left their homes in Kent to cross treacherous seas and explore strange lands in their search for the New World. After five months they landed in Virginia to establish the settlement of Jamestown and lay the foundations of the great American dream.

Four hundred years later the journey from Kent International Airport to Norfolk, Virginia takes a mere eight hours. In the relative comfort of Economy Plus, the modern traveller arrives on the doorstep of one of the most breathtaking stretches of coastline the United States has to offer in less time than it takes to drive from southern England to Scotland.

One thing you can share with those brave explorers of four centuries ago is the sense that you have arrived somewhere rather special.

While the masses of foreign tourists flock to the fail-safe state of Florida for their year-round sun and fun, only those Americans in the know head to Virginia, making the area one of the nation's best kept secrets.

In May, however, the eyes of the world are likely to focus on Jamestown when it marks its 400th anniversary and 18 months of celebrations reach a climax with a visit from the Queen. Three days and nights of music, theatre and firework displays on Jamestown Island will salute an area the explorers found almost by accident, when foul weather drove their ships inland from Chesapeake Bay in search of shelter.

Today, with nearby Williamsburg and Yorktown, Jamestown completes America's famous Historic Triangle of restored English settlements.

With that impressive heritage, Virginia is an ideal holiday destination. It offers the warmest of welcomes and family-friendly fun in an area that is as rich in history as America can be.

Our first stop was Virginia Beach, where modern beachfront hotels combine effortlessly with the glory days of the 1950s America we all know so well from Hollywood films.

Whether it is kayaking with dolphins in the Atlantic Ocean, donning oversized waders to frolic in the water with a 200lb seal, or hanging out like Danny, Sandy and the Grease gang in one of the many diners that litter the coastline, the place surely has something for everybody.

Just a short drive from Norfolk airport, Virginia Beach also has some of the best seafood the Atlantic has to offer.

As eating is a national pastime in the States, there is food aplenty - fresh, carb-free and healthy for the weight-conscious among us or huge, tasty and calorie-laden for the rest. There is even purple ice-cream - the signature dish of the Purple Cow diner - for the children, although it might not be to everyone's taste. And it is guaranteed to leave your mouth a startling shade of violet.

Talking of youngsters, there is enough to intrigue even the most fickle of children at the Virginia Aquarium and Marine Science Centre - the chance to interact with marine life on such a personal level can be found in few other places.

By taking a guided tour around the aquarium, children and adults alike can interact with and learn about fish and mammals indigenous to the area. For a more expensive, once-in-a-lifetime moment, groups of four can get into a tank and play with friendly seals that were rescued from the surrounding area and rehoused at the aquarium.

In the natural world, whale and dolphin watching tours, surf lessons, nature walks, scuba diving packages and mountain biking are all available throughout the year at reasonable prices. But if the traditional, bustling American holiday resort is not your thing, then a short 20-minute flight to the outer banks of North Carolina offers an interesting alternative.

With its rugged, unspoiled coastline, Roanoke - the largest island in the outer banks - is a secluded haven of holiday homes and beach houses, inhabited on a part-time basis by city workers desperate to get away from it all and celebrities hankering for some anonymity. The fact that the nearest McDonalds is 50 miles away says it all.

The area is steeped in history, dating back to when the first settlers arrived from Britain and encountered Native Americans. Their story - popularised in Disney's somewhat sweetened version of Pocahontas - is brought to life daily in film, theatre and museums.

But the most fascinating aspect of Roanoke is the less well-documented story of the lost colonists - the tragic story of the first Western people to set foot in the New World, who vanished without a trace from Roanoke in 1607.

Their fate became one of America's greatest unsolved mysteries, which is unravelled as best as it can be at the island's colonial museum, but leaves plenty of scope for the conspiracy theorists among us to come up with their own ideas on how the first Brits in America may have met a grizzly end.

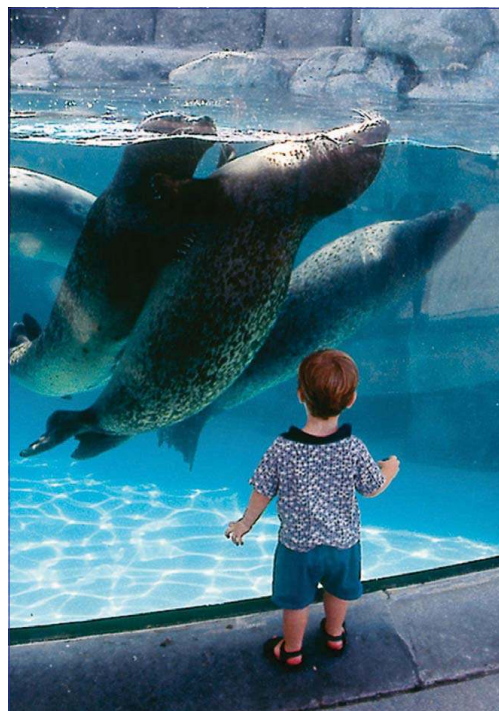

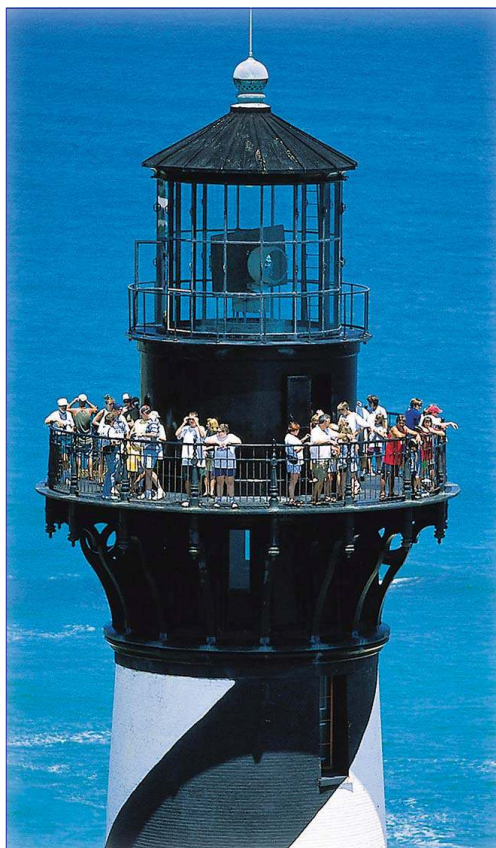

The area is also home to the Wright Brothers' Museum, celebrating the two men who changed the world when they took off on the first flight in

Back on the mainland, the town of Norfolk is bursting with military pride as it plays host to the largest naval base in the world.

Maritime fans indulge their passion for hours at the fantastic National Maritime Center while the less energetic can wile away the hours of a sunny afternoon (the area boasts a year-round average of 20 degrees celsius) wandering the streets, taking afternoon tea in one of the town's many tea shops, or indulging in a spot of culture at the Chrysler Museum of Art.

History buffs can head to the

Within 10 minutes of arriving you become lost in a time warp, where everything from the shops to the restaurants transports you back to the 17th century, giving you a fascinating - albeit rather strange - Truman Show-style trip back in time.

There is even the chance to join in the 'fun' of a traditional 17th-century trial, as the story of the last woman to be tried for witchcraft in the town is re-enacted each night, with the audience acting as the jury.

Back in the modern world an abundance of shopping malls and retail outlets are enough to keep the most ardent of shoppers happy all the way to the airport. There is even a cut-price luggage store in every outlet - it's as if they just know an extra bag is going to be necessary.

With so much to offer, you can even (almost) forgive Virginians for not being able to make a decent cup of tea. If you remember to take your own teabags, you're unlikely to find many complaints with the homely, historic side of Uncle Sam.

Diner dishes

American diners immortalised in movies and TV shows like Happy Days were renowned for their food and the slang terms for their dishes. Replicate their retro style with a menu featuring two classic dishes and a guide to the lingo.

We all fancy something a little different occasionally - sometimes for breakfast it's 'dough well done with cow to cover' or maybe a bowl of 'birdseed' while supper could be 'put the lights out and cry'. Baffled by those menu options? That's the slang used by staff in American diners for buttered toast, cereal or liver and onions.

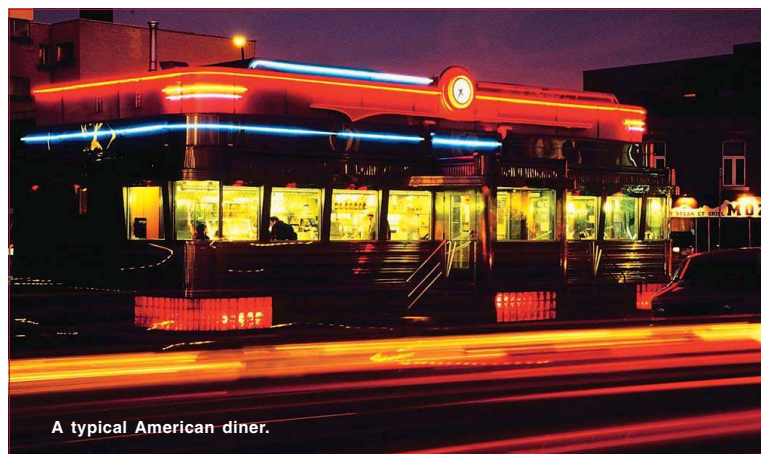

The colourful lingo and decor of diners - comfy booths, long shiny counters trimmed with chrome, as well as laconic gum-popping waitresses - is immortalised in American movies and TV shows like classic sitcom Happy Days.

Now their affordable, delicious food is celebrated by Jennifer Joyce in her new book Diner, which is packed with classic recipes - all with humorous descriptions. She says: "Every country has restaurants that embody their culture. The British have fish and chip shops, the French bistros, and the Americans diners."

"American diner menus reflect the local culture and ingredients - New England has its clam chowder, Louisiana its biscuits and gravy, and Texas its chilli. Diner food is neither delicate nor fancy - it's pure comfort food."

A typical American diner.

Diners originally catered for hungry factory workers and travellers - there were 6,000 in their heyday in the 50s. Favourites were slap-up meals like Truck-Stop Steak With Mushroom Sauce, Hamburger With All The 'Fixins' through to calorie-laden treats like Banana Splits With Hot Fudge Sauce and Devil's Food Counter Cake.

So turn yourself into a 'soup jockey' - a diner waitress - get a checked cloth for the kitchen table, and serve the gang a diner institution, Bowl Of Red (chilli con carne) followed by a New York Cheesecake.

This luxury estate needed its own restaurant and last July owners Karin and Vincent opened this select little jewel overlooking the sea. Enjoy lunch in the downstairs Bistro with a delicious selection of soups and sandwiches, salads or a light meal, or dine upstairs in the evening from the wide selection of starters and main courses. Try Pumpkin Cream to start followed by Chateaubriand with truffle juice for two, or Cataplana with monk-fish, mussels and potatoes. There are a selection of delicious desserts and cheeses, the house wine is very good and the wine list is superb.

Restaurante A Ponte is a newly opened restaurant in the traditional Algarvian village of Alte, where residents and visitors alike are invited to enjoy relaxed dining in unspoiled surroundings. They offer a very varied menu, including vegetarian dishes, snacks and a children's menu. You can also choose from a selection of freshly caught fish and an evening 'A La Carte' menu. The non-smoking dining room is air conditioned and has a family atmosphere to complement the children's play area.

Goodfood news

:: A glass of prune juice might not sound like a glamorous cocktail, but it could be a boon for mums-to-be who often suffer from constipation. Sunraysia Pure Squeezed Prune Juice is made from crushed prunes, not from concentrate, and this surprisingly quaffable drink contains three times the antioxidants of the average pomegranate juice.

Dr Carrie Ruxton, an independent nutritionist, says: "Pregnancy brings lots of changes but perhaps the one that causes quite a bit of discomfort is constipation. I recommend that women with this problem drink one 200ml glass of prune juice in the morning, and another before bed."

Sunraysia's Pure Squeezed Prune Juice is available from Waitrose and Morrisons in the UK.

SHOWS

CrazyHorse

A crazy show - the world-wide famous Crazy Horse! The CrazyHorse cabaret is famous for its elegance and eroticism and is now hitting our shores. It has been described by critics as sensual, mysterious and poetic. The show will be at the Oceanos Auditorium at Lisbon Casino from April 3rd until April 29th with shows on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Sundays from 10pm and Fridays and Saturdays at 8.30pm and 11.30pm. Tickets are on sale at Ticketline and at the casino priced at €20 to €40.

HIT, MISS OR MAYBE?

Unklejam - Love Ya

Go back in time with Love Ya, a funkadelic and fun single with Prince-esque falsettos. Echoes of P-funk and sweet classic soul combine with 80s electro-pop to create a sound that's reminiscent of a blast from the past. Love Ya is the perfect accompaniment to your platforms, flares and Afro wig.

Monica - The Makings Of Me

The Grammy Award-winning singer proves she has the makings of a younger Mary J Blige, laying out her honest emotions about being cheated on, love and sex. Doin' Me Right is a Missy Elliott-produced tribute to a guy who makes seven figures, has the talk and is a, ahem, tongue-flicker, while A Dozen Roses (You Remind Me) is about being in love. Sideline Ho is inspired by an ex-boyfriend who openly cheated on her, and Why Her looks at the feelings post-betrayal. An album worth buying.

30 Seconds To Mars - A Beautiful Lie

Grandiose soundscapes, cryptic social messages and the reputation of being a Hollywood A-lister, Jared Leto might have to endure his own personal fight club just to ignore his critics but the truth behind the tabloid idea is one of a quality American rock band producing an album of quality. A Beautiful Lie is a 12-song tour-de-force and from its opening riff to the final cymbal crash, it's an album that any self-admitting rock fan must at least listen to once.

The Killers - Read My Mind

The Las Vegas four-piece keep the heat turned all the way up with one of the stand-out tracks from Sam's Town, a pop rocker that is typically melodic and anthemic. The accompanying video, which was filmed in Tokyo, is rather amusing yet irrelevant, but the single should guarantee the guys another Top 10 hit.

BOOK REVIEW

Ingrid - Ingrid Bergman: A Personal Biography

By Charlotte Chandler, is published in hardback by Simon & Schuster.

If ever a major film star fell suddenly and spectacularly from grace it was Ingrid Bergman (1915-1982). In the pursuit of love, and in defiance of her public image, she forfeited a glittering screen career and the adulation of millions.

This biography paints an affectionate portrait of a charming and warm-hearted woman who was seriously lacking in judgment.

A Swede, she was born into a middle-class family and was orphaned at 13. From her late teens she pursued a stage and film career and was blessed with luminous beauty, talent and a capacity for hard work.

In 1939 she left her homeland for Hollywood, to star in Intermezzo for producer David Selznick. A contract followed and within five years she was an international star.

Her most memorable role was in Casablanca in 1942, opposite Humphrey Bogart. She had not wanted the part and was amazed when the film was hugely successful and became a classic.

Her other triumphs included

For Whom The Bell Tolls in 1943 and Gaslight the following year, for which she won her first Oscar. In The Bells Of St Mary's in 1945 she played a nun.

Her saintly appearance and the wholesome roles which were her forte proved her undoing in those more puritanical times. People expected her to be like that in real life.

In 1949 she left her husband and young daughter to live with her lover, neo-realist film director Roberto Rossellini, in Italy.

Throughout the world, especially in America, there was outrage and she was publicly denounced and bombarded with hate mail but she and Rossellini married and had three children. For years her career and reputation lay in tatters and the off-beat films made by Rossellini in which she acted were flops. Eventually their marriage ended in divorce.

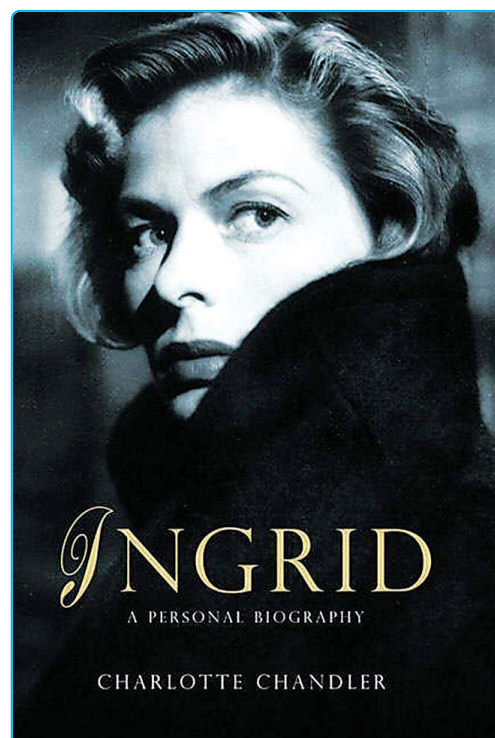

She returned to public favour with her role in the Hollywood film Anastasia in 1956, for which she won another Oscar, but time had passed and things were never quite the same again.

Bergman continued to give acclaimed performances on stage and screen and won her third Oscar for the 1974 film

Murder On The Orient Express. She died of cancer in London on her 67th birthday.

The Last King of Scotland

Linda Hanson (Sandra Bullock) has a beautiful house, a loving husband and two adorable daughters. Her life is perfect, until the day she receives the devastating news that her husband Jim (Julian McMahon) has died in a car accident. For this devoted wife and mother, it's the worst she could imagine. But did she imagine it? When Linda wakes up the following morning her husband is very much alive.

At first, Linda believes the accident must have been a nightmare. Then it happens again; some days Linda awakens to find Jim is next to her alive and well, while on others she awakens a widow. Inexplicably, she is living the days of her life out of order.

Linda's traumatizing premonition sets off a series of puzzling, time-altering events. Her world is turned upside down as the surreal circumstances lead her to discover that her perfect life may not have been all that it appeared. Desperate to save her family, Linda begins a furious race against time and fate to try and preserve everything she and Jim have built together.

Slither is an edgy blend of heart-stopping terror, wry humor and surprising humanity from genre-bending screenwriter James Gunn, whose Dawn of the Dead became one of 2004's most surprising hits.

The sleepy town of Wheezy could be any small town in America, somewhat quaint and gentle, peopled with friendly folks who mind their own business. But just beneath the surface charm, something unnamed and evil has arrived...and is growing. No one seems to notice as telephone poles become clogged with missing pet flyers, or when one of the town's richest citizens, Grant Grant (Michael Rooker), begins to act strangely. But when farmers' livestock turn up horribly mutilated and a young woman goes missing, Sheriff Bill Pardy (Nathan Fillion) and his team, aided by Grant's wife Starla (Elizabeth Banks), uncover the dark force laying siege to their town...and come face-to-face with an older-than-time organism intent on absorbing and devouring all life on Earth.

Slither is the feature film directing debut of screenwriter James Gunn (the recent hit re-envisioning of Dawn of the Dead) and stars Nathan Fillion, Elizabeth Banks, Gregg Henry and Michael Rooker.

Rowan Atkinson returns to the iconic role that made him an international star in Mr. Bean's Holiday. In his latest misadventure, Mr. Bean, the nearly wordless misfit who seems to be followed by a trail of pratfalls and hijinks, goes on holiday to the French Riviera and becomes ensnared in a European adventure of cinematic proportions.

Tired of the dreary, wet London weather, Bean packs up his suitcase and camcorder to head to Cannes for some sun on the beach. Ah...vacation. But his trip doesn't go as smoothly as he had hoped when the bumbling Bean falls face first into a series of mishaps and fortunate coincidences, far-fetched enough to make his own avant-garde film.

Wrongly thought to be both kidnapper and acclaimed filmmaker, he has some serious explaining to do after wreaking havoc across the French countryside and arriving at his vacation spot with a Romanian filmmaker's precocious son and an aspiring actress in tow. Will Bean be arrested by the gendarmes or end up winning the Palme d'Or? It's all caught on camera as Atkinson again applies his awkward athleticism to a comedy of errors in Mr. Bean's Holiday.

Lewis is a brilliant twelve-year-old with a surprising number of clever inventions to his credit. His latest and most ambitious project is the Memory Scanner, a machine that will help him find his birth mother so they can become a family. But before he can find her, his invention is stolen by the dastardly Bowler Hat Guy and his diabolical hat - Doris. Lewis has all but given up hope in his future when a mysterious boy named Wilbur Robinson whisks our bewildered hero away in a time machine and the two travel forward in time to spend a day with Wilbur's eccentric family. In a world filled with flying cars and floating cities, they hunt down Bowler Hat Guy, save the future and uncover the amazing secret of the Robinson family.

CELEB NEWS

Oscar winner Halle Berry is set for another major honour after being selected to receive the 2,333rd star on the Hollywood Walk Of Fame. The actress will be added to the Hollywood Boulevard landmark, right in front of the home of the Academy Awards, the Kodak Theatre. Bruce Willis, who co-stars in her new film Perfect Stranger and Monster's Ball pal Billy Bob Thornton are expected to be among those congratulating the star at the unveiling. « « « » » Angelina Jolie will introduce her new son Pax to the world in a magazine spread, just days after completing his adoption. Jolie and the three-and-a-half-year-old Vietnamese orphan have posed for the Canadian edition of Hello! magazine. Photos reportedly show Pax playing with his new brother Maddox, five, and sisters Zahara, two and Shiloh, 10 months. In an accompanying interview, Jolie says of the new addition to her and partner Brad Pitt's family, "He is a very serious, very sweet little boy. You can imagine what courage it takes to be in all new surroundings with new people and a new language. He is very strong." According to the American agency that handled the process, Jolie's adoption of Pax was finalized, last week, when it was approved by US Embassy officials in the Vietnamese capital Hanoi. « « « » » Tragic model Anna Nicole Smith died of an accidental drug overdose, according to Florida police. The 39-year-old was found dead in her suite at the Seminole Hard Rock Hotel & Casino in Hollywood, Florida on February 8 - five months after the death of her 20-year-old son Daniel in the Bahamas. Seminole Tribe Police Chief Charlie Tiger and Broward County, Florida Chief Medical Examiner Dr. Joshua Perper announced results of the model's autopsy in Dania, Florida. Tiger said there was nothing to indicate foul play in her death and the case was now closed. Perper said there was "no evidence of disease" in Smith's body, but she had been feeling ill and had a high temperature prior to her collapse. He added he had searched numerous medical records and studied numerous bottles of medication in her possession, including Methadone, anti-anxiety and anti-depression medication. An autopsy showed Smith had overdosed on sleeping medication chloralhydrate and a minimum of eight prescription drugs, including Valium. An investigation into Daniel's death is scheduled to begin in the Bahamas. Meanwhile, Smith's partner Howard K. Stern, ex-boyfriend Larry Birkhead and Zsa Zsa Gabor's husband Prince Frederic Von Anhalt are submitting DNA tests to determine which man is the father of the model's six-month-old baby Daniellynn. « « « » » Harold & Kumar Go To White Castle star Kal Penn is set to add professor to his résumé after taking on the chance to be a guest instructor at the University Of Pennsylvania next year. The Asian-American actor - real name Kalpen Modi - will teach two undergraduate courses, according to university director Grace Kao. The Namesake actor Penn received a bachelor's degree in sociology with a specialization in theatre, film and television from the University Of California in Los Angeles, and he is currently pursuing a graduate certificate in international security at Stanford University. « « « » » New TV Superman Tom Welling has given the Teen Wolf film franchise a boost after reportedly signing on for a new movie. In the new Teen Wolf, a remake of Michael J. Fox's 1985 movie, the fun-loving werewolf of the title will be played by a female. Website DarkHorizons.com reports that Smallville star Welling will be part of the supporting cast of the new film. « « « » » dish sizes, Inbs, Sky cards, RTE Irish cards, digitalb cards, art sport cards, football systems, multiswitches, cable etc, etc. Sky subscription packages are activated the same day and do not require a U.K. address or U.K. bank account.

- Sky contract cards ■ Check out the picture quality ■
- Sky freesat cards ■ Sky HD demonstration on display ■
- Check out our premises ■ All major credit cards accepted ■
- Sky contracts activated to existing Sky digiboxes ■

Please note due to the reduction in signal quality to receive Sky, BBC, ITV, Channel 4, Channel 5 etc, 1.3m or 1.33m dishes are not giving the same level of reception to retain these channels all day, however digital satellite systems now supply a new 1.37m high gain dish to combat these losses of reception. Come along to our showroom and see for yourself.

IMPORTANT NOTICE: Some Sky digibox suppliers are charging a "Sky Card Annual maintenance fee" usually €100 and then €100 per year. Digital Satellite Systems are authorised sky agents and cannot and do not charge this add on fee.

Clothes Line

One of the differences I noticed during my first visit to Lisbon was the clothes hanging from apartment windows all over the city and surrounding areas. Never in America had I seen so much laundry on display for the entire world to view. I remember my first thoughts after we had moved here and I was faced with the decision to hang out laundry or not. At first I was tempted to just put everything in the dryer like I had done for so many years in the United States. My neighbors warned me, however, about the high cost of electricity. I also experienced first hand how hot our apartment became in August after drying clothes indoors and how quickly they dried outside.

Deciding to adapt to the culture around me, I began hanging many of our clothes on the clothesline to dry. However, my American mindset would not allow me to embarrass myself by hanging out our undergarments for all of the neighbors to see. These I dried separately inside our home on a drying rack or in the clothes dryer. As time went on I found myself not as concerned about what the neighbors might see and began hanging these delicate items on the clothesline as well.

Having lived in Portugal now for six years, we have seen many newcomers from America visit or move to Portugal. It has been interesting to over and over again watch them go through the same reactions and adjustment process. First they notice all of the laundry hanging outside as they drive along the roads. Next it is time for them to wash their own clothing for the first time and they face the decision of whether or not to hang them on the clothesline or use the dryer. Then the electric bill comes and they decide to dry their clothes outdoors as often as possible. The last thing most of them let go of, however, is the embarrassment of hanging undergarments out for the world to see.

God knows EVERYTHING about us and still loves us. Whether we choose to expose the ugliness and sin that lurks in our hearts or not, He knows. He sees all of the laundry hanging from the windows of our hearts. Nothing is hidden. Isn't it good to know that God's love is unconditional?

"But God showed his great love for us by sending Christ to die for us while we were still sinners." Romans 5:8

Innovation via Intellectual Property in Portugal

Intellectual Property and particularly patent filings in Portugal have been dormant for many years. This situation is about to change due to the efforts of the Instituto Pedro Nunes (IPN) and cooperating universities in Portugal. Universities in the United States in recent years have oriented the efforts of their researchers toward protection of their inventions. These universities have suddenly realized that their intellectual property is a major asset. IPN is well on its way to capitalize on the experiences of the United States.

The United States Embassy in Lisbon organized a two day workshop during the week of March 19th with sessions at the Luso American Development Foundation (FLAD) and the University of Lisbon entitled: Intellectual Property Rights in Portugal: The Gateway to Innovation. Representatives from the United States, European and Portuguese Patent Offices along with the American Chamber of Commerce in Europe made presentations.

FLAD 19 MARCH 2007

The opening session at FLAD was kicked off by Ambassador Alfred Hoffman, Jr who pointed out his own experiences with a US pharmaceutical company that did not locate in Portugal because of the lack of patent protection. He said that biotechnology was well placed to expand in Portugal but funding is lacking because of the inability to protect the products. Later speakers reinforced his comments about the prevalence of pirated and counterfeited goods in Portugal.

The President of the Portuguese Institute of Industrial Property (INPI), António Serge Campinos, said that there was a lot yet to do in Portugal but the government is working on and increasing investment in the patent office and revision of legislation where necessary. He then gave statistics showing that there were improvements in the Portuguese Patent Office. Also he pointed out that the customs officials are cracking down on counterfeit goods coming into the country and being sold at fairs.

Director of Patents and Trademarks in Portugal, José Mauricio, gave a history of patents going back to the Magna Carta of 1623 and outlined the basic legislation for intellectual property in Portugal. He said that at the end of 2006 there were 19,000 trademark applications and 309 new patent applications along with 143 investigations in counterfeiting.

Paul Salmon from the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) gave some statistics which indicate the size of the USPTO in 2006: 8,000 employees with 443,652 patent applications filed and 183,187 patents issued.

An excellent presentation on the advantages of good intellectual property protection was made by Stephane Tronchon of the American Chamber of Commerce in Europe. Some of the European problems include no uniform litigation system and the excessive costs resulting from the many languages. A single European Community Patent system has been proposed but it has been on the table for 30 years.

A presentation as to how the Instituto Pedro Nunes works with universities and industry was made by Ricardo Aguiar and he gave specific examples of contracts and procedures used at Coimbra University.

Maria de Fátima Araújo outlined the economic impact of infractions of intellectual property rights, particularly here in Portugal:

- 1) the first loser is the market share; 2) unfair competition; 3) loss in tax revenue; 4) job losses; 5) relocation of companies; 6) health and safety dangers

She pointed out that the underground economy is increasing world-wide and that 5-7% of world trade is in counterfeits which results in 200,000 lost jobs. Most of the pirated goods in Portugal come from China, Pakistan, India and Turkey. She said that one of the greatest dangers is counterfeit drugs and that in Africa 70% of them are counterfeits.

Paul Salmon followed the same theme by saying that many of the counterfeits have links to organized crime and terrorists.

Judge Eurico dos Reis of the Superior Court of Lisbon said that there are only 2 commercial courts in Portugal with one in Oporto and the other in Lisbon. Fair trade cases are brought in these courts but the practice has difficulties because the courts are not skilled in dealing with intellectual property cases.

UNIVERSITY OF LISBON 20 MARCH 2007

The second session of the workshop took place on the campus of the University of Lisbon and the welcome was extended by José Manuel Pinto Paixão, Coordinator of the Office of Technology Transfer, who began by giving the difficulties in getting researchers to take an interest in intellectual property.

Bandeira of the Lisbon PO, Maria Fernandez Ferreira of the EPO and Paul Salmon of the USPTO.

Sofia Rodrigues talked about novelty and said that in Portugal papers presented before a scientific society within a year of filing a patent application were not prejudicial as contrasted with other countries. Because many countries do not have this 12 month grace period it was agreed among the presenters that it was much safer to file an application before publishing. Ana Bandeira outlined the fees required to file a patent application in Portugal and said that financial support was available to universities and low income inventors.

The patentability of software was presented and discussed at length by Paul Salmon of the USPTO and Maria Fernandez Ferreira of the EPO.

Paul reviewed the judicial decisions in the United States which led to the possibility of obtaining a patent on software. In the Supreme Court decision of Diamond versus Chakrabarty the court said "anything under the sun that is made by man" is patentable. Even so it took a number of years before a software patent issued.

José Marcelino of the Portuguese Institute of Industrial Property says that the debate over software in Europe continues and it appears that none has issued in Europe.

Maria Fernandez Ferreira made a presentation of extensive prosecution of 3 software patent applications in the EPO. None of the applications were ever patented even though the corresponding US Patent Applications were. Two of these US Patents were: 6 044 363 and 6 731 927 if anyone would like to look them up. She also gave the average cost of filing a patent application in the EPO with all European countries as nearly 30,000 euros. The writer can not believe that many such applications are being filed by universities.

In the closing remarks Francisco Pereira do Valle of the Institute of Scientific Applications within the University of Lisbon promised a further workshop to review what was learned in these sessions.

Gilbert Wells, Retired US Patent Attorney

'Penthouse' steals the show in Praia da Rocha

The first of what promises to be a series of hot new bars for Portimão was inaugurated last week, amidst much speculation as to if it would actually be ready in time. Hundreds of guests made their way to Penthouse, to check out Praia da Rocha's much talked-about latest addition.

Olavo Bilac, singer with popular Portuguese band Santos & Pecadores, was the guest of honour, and arrived fashionably late, sometime after midnight. He delighted guests by making an impromptu performance, jamming on guitar with live Rock band Xank, who kick-started the night's entertainment.

Twenty-eight-year-old entrepreneur Albano Lopes Patrício, a former bouncer and also the owner of other renowned establishments in Albufeira, opened Penthouse, which is located in the ex-'Pé de Vento' disco. His vision was to create a place that would appeal to the more discerning customer, young and old, with style and class, good music and an appealing atmosphere. It was successfully achieved.

Penthouse is now open to the general public.

Portugal's Euro 2008 hopes boosted

Portugal are back in contention to qualify for the 2008 European football championships after beating Belgium and earning a hard-fought draw in Belgrade against Serbia. Portugal are now second in their qualifying group and five points behind leaders Poland. Two teams from this group will progress to the Euro 2008 finals.

After overpowering Belgium by four goals to nil on Saturday in Lisbon, Portugal returned from Serbia in mid-week with a credible 1-1 draw.

Portugal still have eight fixtures outstanding, but have the easiest matches remaining, with five of these being against the bottom four teams in their eight-nation group.

Portugal, whose home record is one of the most enviable on the international stage, will face their toughest opponents (Poland, Serbia and Finland) in home fixtures, making them a safe bet to qualify for the tournament they narrowly missed out on winning in 2004 when they lost to Greece in the final.

Portugal makes rugby history

From Auckland to Edinburgh, Portugal was the talk of the rugby world this week as they became the first amateur team to qualify for world rugby's finest showpiece, the World Cup. However, the win was marred by the arrest of six Portuguese players, who it turns out, acted in self-defence when confronted by unruly elements as they were celebrating their famous win in a Montevideo nightclub.

After a nail-biting second-leg match against Uruguay, who they beat 24-23 on aggregate to win, despite losing 18-12, Portugal will now face the likes of New Zealand, Italy, Scotland and Romania.

Portugal will pin their hopes in the France World Cup on defeating Romania, and pushing Six Nations wooden spoon holders Scotland to the limit.

While Portugal has in recent years deemed themselves capable of beating Italy, the Italians are in 2007 are probably the best they have ever been, so keeping the score down would be Portugal's main objective.

Only a few months ago, it would have been difficult to imagine Portugal's amateurs squaring up to the All Blacks as they perform the Haka, but that will become a reality on September 15 in Lyon as they face the World Cup favourites in a match where losing by fewer than a 100 points will be an achievement in itself.

Portugal kicks off its campaign against Scotland on September 9, and after New Zealand, will face Italy on September 19 and the match of their group will be on September 25 when they travel to Toulouse for their clash with Romania.

On an unsavoury note, a group of Portuguese players were arrested after a police officer was struck in clashes after the players had gone to a downtown area in Montevideo. The six were freed on Sunday and will face further charges.

Vanessa Fernandes' record-equalling winning streak ends

Portugal's Vanessa Fernandes finished third in the first BG Triathlon World Cup of the 2007 season, falling short in her bid for a record-breaking 13th consecutive World Cup win.

She was tied with Australian Emma Carney with 12 straight wins and it was ironically a pair of Australians who kept her from the record. Emma Snowsill powered through the ten-kilometre run to win her sixth World Cup race with a time of 1:59:20 and her compatriot Erin Densham finished second at 1:59:51.

Fernandes spent the off-season working on her swimming and it showed as she excited the water in third place. But Snowsill passed her at the five-kilometre mark in the run and never looked back to claim victory. This is the first time since November 2003 that Fernandes has not won a World Cup race she entered.
